It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

The PREFACE.

MONG the great Variety of Histories, in our own on foreign Languages, none are reckon'd more useful than those which have been employ'd in relating great and extra-ordinary Revolutions, or the extraordinary Events that have brought the Contests and Struggles of long continued Parties to a final Determination. Of this Kind is the following Narrative, which contains the winding up of all the Enterprizes that had been projected long before, and often attempted for overthrowing the Protestant Religion and Liberties of the People in shis Kingdom. THE Transactions of this time more indeed to every black, and as tended with so many frange and surprising Incidents, that several learned and ingenious Men have been defirous to fee them put in a clear Light, upon a proper Plan of History; for the many things beare been published relating to the Affairs of Queen Anne's Reign in the me nual Collections, yet they are so vo-luminous, abounding with a Maring of independent Matters, and wie sp defective in the main parts of Hisflory, that they can give box little Satisfaction in matters of Intricacy and Difficulty. Besides that fow Gentlemen have Sufficient Time or Patience to perufe them. The they may become useful Voucbers in seweral Things of Some Consequence, which otherwise might be loft. Authors having departed from the just Rules of writing. History, by drawing out their Norratives into san great Langth, intermixing so much matter foreign to their main Design, and often crowding in so meany bester Circumstances, that their Performances seem to be without any exifible Schame; which in some is osuing to suant of Judgment or true Taffe, and in others to avoid the Imputation of being thought partial; which has led them especially in mattens of Party and Division, sawishly to relate every little Circumstance on both Sides, whereby no right Judgment can easily be form'd. This indeed is a Defect which renders History of little or no use, and isomly to be allowed where Facts are doubtful and uncertain; but where its is otherwise, they aught to be disposed in such a manner, as the Truth may appear plain and naked 1 . 416.

INTRODUCTION:

CONTAINING

A short View of Parties,

The REFORMATION to the Reign of Queen ANNE.

T is now almost beyond dispute that the Differences between the two contending Parties, viz. Those who stood up for their Religion and Liberties, and those who fell in with the Arbitrary Measures of Princes, under the Co-B lour lour of Duty and Loyalty, were for the most part owing to the ill Designs of the Popish Party in this Kingdom, who have been in continual Hopes by fuch Means to pyermin the Reformation, and to re-chabith Popery; whereunto feveral Circumfances and Eyears, during all the preceding Reiens fince the Reformation, have very much contributed: For not to mention the great Struggle in the Reigns of King Henry the 8th, and his Son Edward the 6th, when the Number of Protestants was exceeding small, but to begin with the Abolition of Popery In the Reign of Queen Elizabeth; it will appear from the Computations made at that Time, that above two thirds of the Nation continued still their Affection to the Roman Catholick Religion, and of this Number were many of the Nobility and Gentlemen of chief Note among the Commons; who however could not comply so far with Rame, as to overlook such Impossures in that Hierarchy, as had a manifed Tendency to the Ruin of their Country. These had got so far above their Prepossessions and Prejudices, that they looked upon that Hierarchy to be very much corrupted, and many of the Popish Clergy were known to be both ignorant, and Men of wicked licentious Lives; fo that by degrees they turned more cold and indifferent to Rome, and more reconciled to the Reformation. Yet they were not so averse 3 averse to that Constitution, but that they liked many Things in it, and preferred such Modes in the new established Religion, as most resembled the Pomp and Grandenrof the old Religion; which Appellations many both in England and Scotland made use of, especially those who were the most unfix'd in their Sentiments. And as Matters Agod thus, it split the Reformed into two Parties here, as in Foreign Nations, for as the Disputes between the Lutherens and Calvinists abroad, tended very much to weaken the Protostant Interest; so the Differences between the High Church and Low in England, laid the chief Foundation of all those Calamities that have fince endangered the Protestant Religion. and the Liberties of the People, as these have given a constant Handle to the Papills, to work out their evil Designs both uponout Princes and their Subjects.

IN Queen Elizabeth's Time, sheh as set up separate Congregations, and inclin'd, to the Reformation of Geneva, or to the German or other Churches abroad, who stilled themselves the Reformed, to Opposition to Luther, were here termed Puritans. Those also of the Established Church, who taught the same Doctrines, as they were set forth in the Church Articles; but held any Thing else in that Establishment as indifferent, were classed along with the Puritans, B 2 and were commonly accounted as fuch; to that Queen Elizabeth was forced to give her Assent to some severe Laws against the Puritans, which were contrived and carried on by those who were but half Protestants, whom that Queen and her Ministers were forced to oblige, more out of necessary Policy than Choice. For most of the great Men of her Court, savoured the Puritans as good Protestants, so that the Laws made against them, were never put in execution with any great Rigour. Besides that the Reformed in Scotland, being for the most part of the fame Principles with the Puritans in England, Queen Elizabeth not only found it for the good of the Protostant Interest, to assist the Scots in their Reformation, but to treaf those in England, who favoured their Establishment, with the greatest Tenderness. Besides that many of those who came over from the Netherlands, to avoid the Cruelties of the Spanish Inquisition, and had introduced the Woollen Manufactures into England, were rather inclin'd to the Puritan Way than to the Established Church; which induced that Queen and her Ministers to steer an even Course amidst all Parties, yet so as none of the Protestants in her Dominions might suffer Oppression.

- BUT it was observable, the Aversion some had to the Puritans, grew stronger as that Queen advanced in Years, notwithstanding King James of Scotland was the next Heir to the Crown, and a Protestant. Some, who were altogether unacquainted with the Genius and Temper of that Prince, took wrong Impressions of him, and were the more hard upon the Puritans, that he had been bred up in the Principles of the Scots Reformation, fearing lest the Puritan Way should meet with too much Encouragement under his Government; but those who were better inform'd of his Character, knew yery well that he could never endure the Severity of their Discipline and Morals, but especially that the Reformed in Scotland were Enemies to the Caule of Mary Queen of Scots his Mother, which he always espoused, Therefore the Puritans were suppressed and kept under, by the one Side out of Jealousy, and by the other as they were like to meet with Discouragement, upon his Accession to the Crown of England,

KING James also affected absolute

KING Fames also affected absolute Power, and this was observable in him when he was but young, the Buchanan was in hopes while he was a Child under his Care, that he would be of a different Temper, and even lived long enough to see his Mistake, for he soon gave in to the flattering Insinuations of his Courtiers, and was guided by Persons, who carried such an Arbitrary Sway in Scotland, that the Nobility B 3 and Gentlemen of chief Account in that Kingdom, were forced to make a leng Remonstrance against them, with a very black Catalogue of the Injuties the Nation stifsered under their Government. Remonstrance all possible Regard was shown to the King and to his Government, to far as was confiftent with the Honour and Safety of their Country, and the Duty which they owed to the Laws and Conflictions the of, which they humbly presum'd to be their Right to maintain, together with his Majesty's Dignity, which they represented as being very much trampled upon by theill Instruments, who had intruded them-In this Representaselves into his Favour. tion, the King was plainly and openly advised in those Things, that were for his Interest and the Interest of the Nation, and the Characters and Defigns of his evil Counfellors were laid open with the greatest Freedom. And the their Remonstrance had the Influence to make the King both change some of his Ministers and alter his Measures, yet it was with much Reluctancy, that this could be obtain'd of him; nordid he ever love those who gave him good Advice, the he would shew himself craftily, and diffemble with them after his Manner.

THE Inclination he had to be absolute, was no less manifest when he came to be King

King of England, from several Speeches he made to his Parliaments, which for the most part were of his own compoling; wherein he nied to affert his Kingly Power and Authority to a very high degree, and in such a dogmatical strain, as Schoolmasters are wont to dictare to their Pupils. The same was also observable in some of his Political Writings; where he carried things to fuch Extremes, as would have caused much Uneasiness in his Subjects, had not the wifer fort discern'd many Absurdities in his Notions, and therefore judged of them as mere empty Speculations. Besides that, he was never looked upon as enterprising enough to endanger the Constitution; for he generally put an end to all the Opposition he met with, by some threatning Expressions, which the People for the most part overlook'd, as coming from the King.

BUT as the King's Inclinations flood that way, it gave Encouragement to Parties and Divisions, which self-interested Men had already begun from various Views and Mortives. The Court was generally sway'd by the King's Humour and Inclinations; and it is sufficiently known what unworthy Favourites he always entertained about him, and what Uneasiness this gave to the better fort of his Subjects: For tho' the Nation enjoy'd a sufficient share of Peace from abroad, yet many were assaid of Evils to come, from the B 4

Temper that began to fliew itself in his Time. For now a more than ordinary Distinction was made in Matters of Religion; The Laws were put in execution against the Puritans, while Favour was shewn to the Papilts, and such other Schemes formed, as tended to weaken the Protestant Interest, and to unhinge the Constitution. For it was to humour the King's Ambition, that his Power and Prerogative were screw'd up to fuch a Height by his Ministers and Fayourites; and that the Homilies of the Church against Rebellion, tho' they were perhaps chiefly design'd in Opposition to the Usurpations of Rome upon the Civil Power, yet were interpreted so, as they might best favour the prevailing Notions of the Court, which aim'd at what some of his Successors afterwards carried to a greater Height; viz. at dispensing with the Laws and Constitutions of the Kingdom. Such as were the King's greatest Favourites among the Clergy, generally fell in with these Maxims of the Court; and therefore the King was willing to have allowed them a much greater Latitude in their Jurisdiction, than was consistent either with the Laws of the Land, or the Principles of good Government, had not a stop been put to it by the Judges, who unanimously gave their Opinion against this new Scheme; for all Men saw what the King and his Counsellors aim'd at; viz. to set up an absolute solute Power in the Crown, and an Independency in the Church.

BUT as this reconcil'd abundance of the Clergy to the King's Sentiments, so many of them became very industrious in promoting high Principles, such as were for setting the King even above the Laws, and themselves above the King: And tho they could not gain their Point with the Judges, who showed the Absurdity of their Notions. who shewed the Absurdity of their Notions, and their Inconsistency with the English Constitution, nor go down with the better fort; yet they made it their business to side with the Court-Engines, in laying the Foun-dation of those unhappy Divisions, which rent the Nation asunder for some successive Ages.

AS the King had naturally an Aversion to the Puritans, so they were the more dislik'd by the Court-Parasites, that they were not without many Friends among the more moderate Clergy. Great Numbers among the Laity also patroniz'd them as far as was in their power; because the Puritans, be-sides that little or nothing could be objected as to their Morals, they also join'd with others in Desence of the Constitution, against such things as threatned the Protestant Religion, or the People's Liberties. The King, on the other hand, gave countenance to the Popish Party, who fell in with his Maxims, because they found they had a direct Tendency dency to divide his Protestant Subjects by a partial Regard he shewed to one side, and a Harred to the other: And tho' that Prince often gave himself Airs of running down the Popish Religion, both in his Conversation and Writings, out of an Affectation of being thought a Learned Man, yet there were so many intricate Mazes in that Constitution, which he could never penetrate into, that it feem'd to create in him a fecret Veneration for them, as appears by many arch Expresfor them, as appears by many arch Expressions of his concerning them: and none were held in greater Efteem by him, than some Papists both in England and Scotland, who had always his Ear, and were preferred to some of the highest Offices, or had private Pensions bestowed on them. He seem'd to have no Notion of governing, but by nateer Craft; and therefore would endeavour to make his best Subjects believe he had wife Views in all his Conduct towards the Reman Catholicks, and that he made many useful Discoveries to the Publick by them. But this was looked upon as nothing but grimace, while the King shewed a manifest Partiality towards them, and studied as far as he could go to advance their Interest. Be-sides, that he had always other Motives for favouring Papists, for he was assaid of their Matchiavelian Principles, that they would conspire against his Person, or stir up soreign Princes against him , which was partly the Reason, why he suffered his Son-in-Law, the King of Bohemia, to fall a Sacrifice to the Emperor, when he might have been instrumental in supporting the said Elocker, to have suppressed the Power of the House of Austria, and to have maintain'd the Protestant Cause. The Papills were also the chief Pavourers of the Cause of Mary Queen of Scots, his Mother; which they always elpoused in Opposition to the Reformed in Scotland, who set her aside for her Misgovernment, and for many heinous Crimes laid to her Charge; for which King James could never forgive them, nor could he endure Queen Elizabeth's Memory, upon whose account she at last suffered Death; norwithflanding the Views of Queen Mary were utterly to overthrow the Protestant Religion, and that the had a very powerful Party both at home and abroad, who adhered to her; but especially the King's Partiality towards his Mother was the more remarkable, in tegard her Zeal was so great for promoting the Cause and Interest of Popery; that she made over the three Kingdoms to the King of Spain, in case her Son continued a Protestant: for the looked upon Queen Elizabeth, as having no just Title to the Crown of England; and if the had prevail'd in her Cause, King James must either have chang'd his Religion, or been set aside from the Succession. For this Reason the Papifts

Papilts always treated her as a Saint, and that her Character might be consistent with the Honour they paid to her Memory, they not only endeavour'd to vindicate her of all the Crimes laid to her Charge, but represented her as a Person of transcendent Virtue. This was so acceptable and pleasing to King Fames, that all the Courtiers and their Dependents extolled that Queen to a wery extravagant Degree, and fell in with the Papists in running down her Opposers; which was both a very great Injustice, and a Discredit to the Reformation. As to King Tomes, he was at a great deal of pains to influence Thuanus in her Favour; but when he could not succeed with Thuanus against the Truth, he tampered with Cambden, who has given a very unfair Account of many things relating to Queen Mary, and the Affairs of Scot, land; who being a Person much esteem'd for his Learning, and withal, reputed an honest Man, his Relation of those Affairs therefore turned the Scales very much in favour of Queen Mary's Cause, so far as related to the Contests between her and her Subjects; by which means the Scots Reformation was looked upon to be no better than Rebellion; and the Puritans in England suffered greatly on the same account, as they were Favourers of the Scots. Upon this, the highflown Principles gathered great Strength. Those, both among the Clergy and Laity, who looked upon themselves as the best Churchmen, fell in with the Papills in many of their Political Maxims; and under the colour of Loyalty, were promoting abfolute Power, and such Principles as were injurious to the Religion and Liberties of the People:

BUT the Consequences of these things could not be fully seen into in this King's Reign, because he had not Courage of push his Designs where he mer with opposition. But his Son Charles the Fitst, who had been bred up in all his Pather's Notions of absolute Power, and who was of a more enterprising Genius; encouraged those Principles to his own ruin. "Whatever he might be as to some Virtues, for which his Favourites so much extolled him? it is certain he was not without many Faults; which were fo well known; that neither the Lord Clarendon, nor the Publishers of his History, could altogether conceal them: He had a considerable share of Pride, and a falle Lostinels of Spirit, which looks fully as deformed in a King, as in a private Man; and is of a more unhappy Tendency, being joined with Power. Nor had he Skill and Dexterity as many other Princes, and great Men, or even as his own Father, to difguise this untowardly Temper; and he was so far from forgiving those whom he imagined to have done him him any Injury or Difrespect, or from overlooking their Faults, which is sometimes an Act of Prudence in a Prince, that on the contrary, he would profesure them with the utmost Resentment; which created him a great many Enemies among his Subjects. His Father's Maxim, no Bishop no King, was so much idoliz'd by him, that he was even ready to give the Power out of his own hands, into the hands of Archbishop Laud, and some other favourite Clergymen. He was mightily for adorning Churches, and stiff in maintaining Ceremonies; and feem'd to think the Roformation had very much debased Religion, by casting out superfluous Ornaments and Ceremonies; and was to angry with those who held such things in any kind of Indifferency, that he looked upon them to be no better than Hercticks: And all his Schemes in Matters of Religion tended to Persecution, and in Civil Affairs to arbitrary Power. This was the cause why his Parliament opposed him, which gathered strength as his Resentment increased; for the higher that grew, the more arbitrary were his Proceedings, which put his Subjests, the more on their Desence. And as his Interest by this means declin'd among the far greater part of his Protestant Subjeds, both Churchmen and Puritans; fo he fell in with Papifts, and made very dishor disconourable Treaties with his own Popilh Subjects in Ireland, for their Assistance against his Protestant Subjects in England and Scotland; which with the dreadful Massacre in that Kingdom, and his setting up his Standard against his Parliament, did so manifestly threaten their Liberties, that they thought it their Duty to oppose the King's Deligns with all their might; and to what a Catastrophy things were brought, is sufficiently known. When Wars and Tumules are once begun, it is hard to know where they will end. The Power was at last wrested into the hands of a few, whereby the King fell a Sacrifice to Party; and the Constitution it self was overturn'd by that Army, which at first was rais'd for its Defence.

THESE things proved very unhappy to the Nation, and to the whole Protestant Interest. The Schemes of Archbishop Land, and some others of the Clergy, who had been in chief Favour with the King, were so disagreeable to most of the Protestants, that many of them thereupon conceived a great dislike to Episcopacy;
insomuch that they could not be prevailed on afterwards to comply with that kind of Government, some of the Bishops having carried their Pretensions so very high during the two preceding Reigns, that it was suspected some of them aim'd at the Restoration

storation of Popery. Others, by conceiving wrong Notions about the Jure divino-ship of their Office, formed to themselves such Schemes as were not very consistent with the Constitution of the Church of England, but savoured rather of Avarice and Ambition: and tho' the better fort of the Nonconformists not only consented to the Restoration of King Charles the Second, but were even forward in their several Capacities to promote it, from a dislike to many. things in Cromwell's Government; yet when that King came to enjoy his Father's Crown, he rewarded them but very indifferently for their Services and good Disposition towards his Restoration. Tho'he never pretended to absolute Power, as his Father and Grandfather both did, who seem'd to look upon the Rights and Privileges which the Subjects claim'd, 'and had enjoy'd for many Ages, to be nothing but an Usurpation upon the regal Authority; yet he plainly shewed his Inclinations that way, by entertaining the same fort of People about him. He managed all his Affairs by private Advice, and seldom made use of his Privy-Council. All the same Principles that were so strenuously promoted in the two preceding Reigns, were again espoused with greater warmth than ever, by the King's chief Favourites. The Church of England being again restored, it is well known known what severe Laws were made against fuch as refused to conform; and how this was followed, both in England and Scotland. with Fines, Imprisonments, and other Acts of Persecution. The Nonconformists of all forts were branded as the Persons who had brought all the late Calamities upon the Nation, and as the Murderers of the late King; though many of them, both in publick and private, shewed their Detestation of the said Murder with more freedom and boldness, than some who pretended to be his best Friends: On the other hand it is well known there were few Nonconformists among those who first took Arms against him, most of the Members of both Houses being Churchmen; and that it was chiefly his own ill Conduct which brought him to the Block. But such was now the Genius of. the Times, that all the Crimes of that Age were imputed to them, and nothing was in fashion but high-stown Principles. Whoever appeared in behalf of the Constitution, 2gainst absolute Power, and the King's arbitrary way of managing Affairs by Favourites, were looked upon as Republicans, Enemies to kingly Government, Schismaticks and Enemies to the established Church; which very much incenfed many of the Clergy against them, who being for the most part misinform'd in those things that happened, during the late Wars and Confusions.

fusions, and being also jealous of the Nonconformilts, whose Ministers, generally speaking, were Men of good Lives, carried matters to the highest extreme of Pique and Resentment. And on the 30th of Famuary the Pulpits were often profan'd with Lyes and Scandal; for the Son being now on the Throne, the Father was therefore extolled as a Saint and Martyr; and fuch as stood up firmly for Liberty and the Protestant Religion, were denounced Rebels by false Parallels out of Scripture, and were much more disliked by some People than the Papists, who, as in the preceding Reigns, were again brought into great Favour. The Affair of Mary Queen of Scots was revived against the Promoters of the Reformation in Scotland, and the Nonconformists in England; and such as favoured them in any respect were ranked in the fame Class with the Scots, and were represented as Persons bred up in rebellious Principles.

BUT the true Design of all this was to overturn the Protestant Religion; tho it is probable many of the Clergy, and others who were active in dividing Protestants, did not see into the ill Consequences thereof. King Charles, if he own'd any Religion at all, it was that of Popery; which indeed, was the most suited to his licentious Life. His Brother was a more con-conscientious Papist; and as Charles had an ardent desire to promote him to the Succession, so he made it his Business to weaken the Hands of all those whom he knew would be his greatest Opposers, who were generally the best Protestants: And therefore such were, always held in greatest esteem with him, who had the least of Principle, and could be won over at all times by Court-Favours. The French King was also at this time watching every opportunity to ruin England, in order to aggrandize himself; and while other Nations were folliciting King Charles to give a helping hand, to restrain the Power of the French King, that Prince was supplying Charles with Money to support his Luxury; who in requital was permitted to gain all Advantages of this Kingdom in the way of Trade. King Charles also depended on the Assistance of that King to promote his Brother to the Succession; and it was generally believed the French Gold went a great way in casting out the Bill of Exclusion; so that their Projects succeeded so far, as to bring James the Second upon the Throne.

WE need not enter into the Particulars of that King's Reign, nor mention any thing concerning his Character. It is sufficiently known, that King James the Second was a weak Prince; he was Proud and Obstinate to the highest degree, and gave sufficient Proofs how little he regarded the Constitution, by his arbitrary Meafures, which rendred his Reign very fhort and unfortunate. For the Rapidity of his Proceedings turned the Tide so strongly against him, that most of his own Friends were forced to desert him, and his Cause. But though the Cause of Liberty was by this means afferted, and the Protestant Religion secured from any dangerous Enterprizes at home; yet the bad Measures that were prosecuted during this, and the preceding Reign, brought the Nation into imminent danger from the Enterprizes of the French King; which leads us into a new Scene of things, that fhall be taken notice of, so far as they are necessary to our present Design.

IT is sufficiently known, that the boundless Ambition of the late French King Lewis the XIVth. was the main Source of all the Troubles and Confusions that have attended this Nation, and the greatest part of Europe, for above an Age past. He began early to discover an uncommon Thirst after Power and Dominion, which was much inflamed, as well by the prosperous State in which he found his Affairs when he came to the Years of Maturity, as by the Flatteries of the Great Men of his Court; who, besides that it is a natural Vice

Vice in Frenchmen to deify and adore their Kings; the Courtiers and Great Men found also their Advantage in it, as it gave Rise to such Measures as tended to their own private Interest; some being greatly inriched by the Wars, and others by having the Management of the Revenuesi!'And therefore, that King being in great Prosperity and Grandeur upon his first setting out in the World, and having also all imaginable Incentives from his own Subjects to aggrandize himself, thought of nothing less than universal Monarchy; and having set out with this vain Desire, he soon became a Plague to all the Nations round about him, by his continual Incroachments upon their Dominions. The Emperor and a great part of the Empire foon began to feel the Force of his Arms; as did also Lorain and Savoy; the Spanish Netberlands were in a manner swallowed up by his Armies; and the United Provinees were under imminent danger of undergoing the same Fate.

NO Ties or Engagements were sufficient to bind that Monarch, who also took all Advantages in the way of Treaty to weaken and undermine his Neighbours, by sowing Misunderstandings and Jealousses among those whose Interest it was to be firmly united; particularly between England and Holland, until King WILLIAM was placed at the Head of a powerful Confederacy, wherein the Emperor, and most of the Princes of Germany, the King of Spain, the Duke of Saury, and the two Maritime Powers were all engaged. This Confederacy was begun at Vienna, between the Emperor and the Statist General, who entered into a Treaty of Alliance, offensive and defensive, the 12th of May 1089; which the other Powers also fign'd that same Year, and was called, The Grand Alliance; wherein was stipulated. " THAT the contracting Powers should 482 " in a hostile Manner, either jointly or " separately, with all their Forces, both " by Sea and Land, against the said French "King, and his Allies. THAT it should " not be lawful for either of the Pag-" ties to withdraw from this War with " France, or to enter separately upon any " Convention or Treaty of Peace, or Ces-" fation of Arms, without the Confent or " Concurrence of the other Allies. THESE were the chief Articles agreed to by the Grand Allies, for the Preservation of Europe. But notwithstanding this Precaution, things went on but slowly against France; which if not so powerful as the whole Confederacy, had some Advantages beyond them, none of them singly being in the least able to come in Competition with that Monarchy, which was very large and populous, and the People under absolute Subjection; whereas the Confederates, notwithstanding the great Dangers that threatned them, were seldom altogether unanimous, but had their Contests

tests and Jarrings about their respective Interests, or were not without intestine Divisions, as happened to be but too manifest in this Kingdom; which very much hindered the Efforts England might have made against the common Enemy.

FRANCE had also this Advantage beyond the Confederates, that being placed, as it were, in the Centre of Europe, her Armies seldom had further to march than to the Frontiers of her own Dominions; for such we may account her Conquests, as well as her antient Territories. the French Armies had but short Marches into Germany, and to the Dutch Provinces; their Towns in the Netherlands, and on the Confines of Germany, being like so many Nurseries for Soldiers, who were ready upon a Call to attack their Enemies. France was also in possession of Pignerol, and some Dependencies thereof, which gave their Armies an easy Access into Italy: Nor was it very difficult for them to make their way into Spain, as that Country lies contiguous to several Parts of France; and that their Frontier Towns were, many of them, but weak and ill defended. Whereas the Confederates, for the most part, were obliged to act defensively, or to march their Forces a great way, especially from the North of Germany, and other Northern Countries, that the Year was often far spent, before they could be brought into the Field; which was very advantageous to France, as their Armies were not only form'd before the Northern Confederates could begin their Marches, but were put into such a Situation, as enabled them also to stand their Ground: And in the Space of a few Years, the French were grown so powerful at Sea, that they several times encountered the combined Fleets of England and Holland, tho they were generally worsted.

THIS Excessive Power, with so many Advantages which concur'd together, to render France so formidable; justly alarm'd all Europe, the See of Rome not excepted, which at first stood mostly with the Confederates, lest the French King should become universal Monarch: and it was observeable till this Confederacy was form'd, no Year passed, wherein he made not some very considerable Acquisition to his Dominions. Nor were the Confederates, after their Union, able to break his Power, or to humble his Pride; for in all the Battles and Encounters, that happened from the Year 1688, to the Year 1697, that the Peace of 1697. Refwick was concluded, the Success was various, inclining sometimes to France, and sometimes to the Confederates.

BUT if the Power of France was so very considerable before this Time, it became much more so afterwards. The Peace of Reswick gave only a short breathingtime to all the Parties engaged in the War; for King William was forced to accept the best Terms he could get, the Nation being then under various Discontents, besides the Scarcity of Money, which was occasion'd by the Alteration of the Coin. Some new Conjunctures in the Affairs abroad, carried also a very dismal Aspect; for the King of Spain was grown very infirm and sickly, having at the same time no Issue, and it was observable that those who had the Management of his Affairs, were now become cold and indifferent in the common Cause, which created the more Jealousy in the other Confederates, that in the Treaty of Reswick, no right Stipulations were made for the Succession of the Crown of Spain, to which the French King constantly claimed a Right by his Queen, who was the King of Spain's eldest Sister, notwithstanding he had before his Marriage renounced the same.

THIS brought on the Partition-Treaty, whereby all the Dominions of old Spain and the Indies were made over to the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, the next Male Heir, in case the King of Spain should die without Issue; the Dutchy of Milan to Charles Arch-Duke of Austria, the Emperor's second Son, who is now Emperor. By the same Treaty, Sicily and Naples were made over to the Dauphin, with all the Territories of Spain, situated on the Coast of Tuscany; also the Province of Guipuscoa, and some Places of Importance on this side the Pyrences. But the Electoral Prince of Bavaria dying soon after, another Treaty was agreed to, whereby the Arch-Duke of Austria was to have Spain and the Indies, and the Dauphin the Addition of Lorain to his Share; Milan was to have been made over to the Duke of Lorain, the Emperor and the King of the Romans being to renounceall Right to the said Monarchy.

BUT tho King William, and the States-General went further in this Matter than could be well relished by the Subjects of England, or by the Emperor and the other Allies, without whose Participation this Treaty was made; yet all the Advantages proposed by it to France, were not sufficient to satisfy the Ambition of the French King, who aim'd at nothing less than the whole Spanish Monarchy, as appeared by what happened soon after. Therefore King WIL-LIAM engaged in this Treaty, to hinder the said Monarchy from falling wholly into his hands, and it was no doubt to prevent Delays that the Emperor and the other Allies were not called into it, whose several Demands and Pretensions must have been answered; which could could not have been done so soon as was ne beffary, in so critical: a Conjuncture. For the French Agents were now very active at the Court of Spain, to get that King to declare the Succession to his Crown, in favour. of the House of Bourban. And how well they. succeeded in this Matter, appeared in a yeryshort time, when the King of Spain died, and by his last Will less the Duke of Anjou, the Dauphin's second Son, universal Heir of all his Dominions both in Europe and America; which the French King accepted, tho in Violation of the Partition-Treaty, lately entered into. And in a publick Declaration, he ordain'd, "That the faid Duke " of Anjou his Grand-son should always pre-" serve the Rights of his Birth in the same " Manner, as if he had actually resided in " France. That if the Dauphin and his el-" dest Son the Duke of Burgundy should " happen to die without Male Issue, in that " case the said King of Spain, claiming the " Rights of his Birth, should be the true and " lawful Successor, and Heir of the Crown " and Dominions of France, the absent, and " that after his Decease, his true and lawful " Heirsshould come to the same Succession:" Whereby the two Monarchies were in danger of being united under one crown'd Head.

THIS Declaration gave the more Surprize, because Philip was then but very Young, and the sole Direction of his Affairs were altogether under the Management of his Grand-father, and the Court of France. He was sent into Spain with all possible Expedition, and his Grand-father notify'd his Acceptance of the Spanish Monarchy, to all the Courts with whom he held any Correspondence. He was still negotiating with England and Holland; with a Defign, as he always gave out, to prevent the further shedding of Blood, and to confirm the Peace of Europe; and divers Conferences had been held, to supply the Defects of the Beace of Refwick, and the Partition-Treaty. But no fooner did this Event of the King of Spain's Death fall out, that the Succession to the Crown of Spain was settled on the French King's Grand-fon, when it appeared plainly that all the preceding Negotiations of that Court, were only to spin out the Time in Delays: for after this, the French Minister at the Hague began to change his Countenance, and refused to treat otherwise with the Dutch, than separarely without the Participation of England.

AT the same time; the French Armies were drawing in very great Numbers towards the Netherlands, and were raising new Fortifications almost within Cannon Shot of the Datch Frontiers; which very much alarm'd that Republick; obliged them to cut their Dykes, to put some of their Country under Water, and to be at an equal Expence as in a

Time

Time of War, without any Benefit to their State; all which they represented to King Wil liam, praying for speedy Assistance from Eng. land. This Representation was likewise back'd by the Court of Vienna, complaining of the like Incroachments on the fide of Germany. The French King had also drawn the Bledor of Bavaria over: from the Confederate Interest; and had entered into a strict Alliance with the lave King of Siveden, who was then very young, of a matrial Spirit, and had his Head full of Projects, which alarm'd the Princes in the North of Germany; while others were aw'd by the Power of France, which was now become to formidable by the Addition of Spain, that they durit not declare their Sentiments - State

THIS extraordinary. Increase of the French Power; with the King's open and bare-fac'd Increachments on his Neighbours, in Violation of the most solemn Engagements, his seizing the Trade of the Spanish West-Indies, and debarring the Subjects of other Nations, which was one of the sinst Steps he took with respect to Spain, carry'd such a threatning Aspect, that the Parliament of England resolved unanimously to oppose him; though the unscasonable Party-Divisions in this Kingdom proved a no small Encouragement to that Monarch in all his Enterprizes, as it kept the Fire of Dissension always burning, which was often like to produce such Events, as tended to favour his Designs. Nevertheless, the Parliament at this time resolved unanimously to support the Dutch, and both Houses addressed the King on that account. The Lords Address was, " That his Majesty would enter in-" to a strict League offensive and defensive " with the States-General, for the com-" mon Preservation of both Nations, and " invite into it all Princes and States that " were concerned in the present visible Dan-" ger." And the Commons resolved, nemine contradicente, "That they would ef-" fectually assist his Majesty to support his "Allies, and would immediately provide " Succours for the States-General."

THUS far the Parliament thought fit to resolve concerning France, judging rightly, that these Encroachments of the French Monarch on his Neighbours, would soon affect England, unless a timely Stop was put to them: And accordingly a good Number of Forces were fent over the same Year to join the Dutch; a good Fleet was also equip'd, and sent to Sea; and Preparations were made to carry on the War vigorously. King William also went over to Holland, and entered into a fresh Treaty with the Emperor and the States General, in consequence of the Grand Alliance, wherein they agreed mutually to affift each other against the common Enemy, until Satisfaction should be given to the House of Austria, in relation to the Spanish Succession. That the Spanish Netberlands should not be left in the hands of the French, and that the English and Dutch should keep all such Places as they should conquer in the West Indies during the War.

WHILE these things were in agitation, King James the Second died at St. Germains, and the French King acknowledged the Pretender's Title to the Crown of England, contrary to the Fourth Article of the Treaty of Reswick; which so much incensed People here in England, that whatever other Differences happened among them, most were unanimously resolved to resent this Indignity offered by the French King, when he had so lately acknowledged King William's Title, as established by Parliament.

IN the midst of all these threatning Dangers, the Duke of Glocester also died; who being the next Heir to the Crown after the Princess Anne his Mother, the settling the Succession became a Matter of the greatest Consequence. King William at the same time was in a bad State of Health, but was so careful of the publick Interest, that he made it his chief Business to have the said Succession established on the House of Hanover, in case the said Princess Anne should die without Issue: for he was so sensible of the ill Consequences that might happen from the Divisions and Animosities in this Kingdom, and his Zeal was so great for securing the Protestant Religion and the Liberties of Europė, which turned wholly upon this Hinge, of having a Protestant Successor to the Crown, that he thought it the safest way not to leave this Matter undetermin'd in the fucceeding Reign; and therefore he procured an Act in the next ensuing Parliament, declaring the Succession to devolve on the Princess Sophia, Electress Dowager of Hanover, as the next Protestant Heir, and the Heirs of her Body being Protestants. This Act had the Royal Affent given it the 12th of June 1701; and the 8th of March next following, K. William died, having a little before his Death procured another Act to make good the above-mentioned Succession, as the best Expedient to disappoint those who were in hopes, by the assistance of France, to make way for the Pretender, and by that means to accomplish the old Design of introducing Arbitrary Power, and restoring Popery in this Kingdom. He also very earnestly recommended the Union between the two Kingdoms, that the Succession might be established in Scotland as well as in England, and as the best Means to strengthen the Efforts made against the Common Enemy; for which his Memory will always be grateful to Posterity.

HISTORY

O F

QUEEN ANNE, &c.

UEEN ANNE being the next Protestant Heir to her Sifter Mary, came peaceably to the Crown upon the Death of King William; notwith- 1702. standing the Affairs abroad were in a troubled Condition, and the Nation at home full of unseasonable Divifions.

Those who adhered to the Revolution Principles could object nothing against her, not only as she was married to a Protestant Prince, but as she join'd in the Revolution, and to outward appearance always adhered to the same Principles. Neither was fhe opposed by those who were in the Pretender's Cause. For besides that Things were not come to that maturity, so as to enable the Pretender's Friends to make any Attempt against her Succession to the Crown; they were also buoy'dup with new Hopes upon this extraordinary Event of King William's Death, who always acted from an invincible Principle in opposition to all their Schemes: Whereas The State Queen Anne, tho they knew she was ambitious of Affairs of coming to the Crown, yet they foresaw from the State of Affairs abroad, and the Anne's Ac-Temper of the Nation at home, that their cession to cession to the Crown. Cause would be in some likelihood of ga-

> rather, because the Queen had so much Par-tiality towards her Father, that she was no real Enemy to those who adhered to his Interest; and being herself past all Hopes of having more Children to inherit the Crown after her, they always imagined this would render her indifferent as to the Succession in the House of Hanover.

> thering strength during her Reign: And the

UPON these Views the Schemes of this Party were greatly forwarded, to which the Circumstances of Affairs at that time very much

much contributed. For the the Nation had been so alarm'd with the Dangers that threatned their Religion and Liberties before the Revolution, that most People had conceived a great Aversion to Popery and Arbitrary Power, whereby things were carry'd on with. great Unanimity in behalf of the Common Interest for some time; yet it was not long, when this Surfeit began to wear off, and the old Feuds were again revived. Many who had shewn themselves sufficiently zealous in the Revolution-Cause, began to grow cold and indifferent; some thro' their Inconfrancy, and some from Views of Ambition and Self-Interest. And K. William being a Stranger, could never gain the Love and Affection of the common People, while: so many Engines were set on foot to biass their Judgments against their true Interest. Therefore such was the general Disposition of the Nation upon the Queen's Accession. to the Throne, that nothing could so effectually have stifled their Differences, as the Expectations, which some, who were disgusted at King William's Government, had . 105 in the Queen; and the Dangers that threatned this Kingdom, and all Europe, from the: excessive Power of France, which rendered: most Protestants unanimous in going to war, whatever other Differences were among them. Whereupon the Duke of Marlborough was appointed Commander in Chief D 3 of

of the Army by the Queen, and a Declaration of War against France was issued forth War prothe 4th of May, about two Months after her claim'd against Accession to the Crown. France.

HER Reign began with Success both by Sea and Land, nor was there any Encou-The begin-ragement wanting to enable the Duke of cessful.

ning of her Marlborough to proceed with Vigour against the common Enemy: for at this time the Duke was mostly inclined to favour the High-Church Party, who carry'd the greatest fway; as did also the Lord Godolphin; that no opposition was made either to the Alliances abroad, or to the raising the Supplies at home; because the High-Church Party look'd upon those two Lords, and some others who were in chief Confidence. with the Queen, as their own; And the. Low-Church Party contributed chearfully to the Common Cause, which they had favoured all along, as being every way agreeable to their Sentiments.

ABOUT the latter end of the Year Charles Archduke of Austria being pro-1703. claim'd King of Spain, by virtue of the late Alliances, came over to England, and from thence was conducted to Portugal the Spring following, on board the Confederate Fleet. in order to take possession of Spain, by the assistance of the Confederate Forces, who arrived with him in Portugal. For the King of Portugal, who had been awed into a. Treaty Treaty with the French, contrary to his Interest, relinquished his Engagements as soon as the English and Dutch Fleets appeared to defend his Coasts from the Insults of France. And the Duke of Savoy, who had been trap d in the same Snare, also less the French, and join a the Allies, notwithstanding his two Daughters were married, the one to the Duke of Burgundy, the Dauphin's eldest Son, and the other to the present King of Spain, his second Son. In this time the Allies took Venlo from the French, as also Ruremond, Stevensvaert, and the Citadel of Liege; and at Sea destroy'd the French and Spanish Ships at Vigo, from whence they brought a considerable deal of rich Booty, besides several important Advantages which Prince Eugene gain'd in Italy; all which portended well to the Confederate Interest.

BUT in the midst of these Successes abroad, the Divisions at home began soon to come to a great height. For this same Year the Bill against Occasional Conformity was brought into the House of Commons, and carry d by a Majority in that House; which caused several Conferences between them and the Lords, who look'd upon it both as unseasonable and uncharitable; and of this mind were also some of the Bishops, so that it was rejected. But so earnest were the Commons to have this Bill pass, that they D 4 brought it again upon the Stage the next Session, with a design to work out some Great Men who favour'd the Diffenters, and to bring the Management of Affairs wholly into the hands of their own Party. The Duke of Marlborough, the Lord Godolphin, and some others of their Friends voted at first for that Bill; but finding that such Divisions might have an unhappy Tendency, and that the Schemes of this Party were inconsistent with the publick Interest and the Measures then on foot, were at last not only forced to leave them, but to use all possible means to have them discountenanced, and in the Elections to have such Members thosen to sit in Parliament, as would give no Interruption to the War, by refusing or retarding the necessary Supplies, or doing any other Thing that might encourage the Enemy: Such as would maintain the Laws. that had been made to promote Unanimity among Protestants, who would reject those Schemes that tended to Persecution, and to favour Arbitrary Measures of any kind, and who in their Principles, were firm to the Revolution, and every thing that might preserve Liberty and Property.

WHEN this was accomplished, all Things went on smoothly Every Year was trowned with fresh Victories. And in the Year 1706, the Union of the two Kingdoms, which beforehad been several times attempted in vain, was agreed to by the Com-The Union missioners of both sides, and passed without Kingdoms, much Opposition in both Houses, the next en-andother fuing Session; which strengthen'd the Nation Events. and the whole Confederacy against the CommonEnemy, and added so much Power to those who were at the head of Affairs here, that they met with no Interruption in their Proceedings for some time. The French Armies, which were driven out of Germany, after the famous Battle of Hackstet, could never return any more to disturb the Empire; and besides many fignal pitch'd Battles, which the Confederates won in Flanders, they became also: possessed of the Enemies strongest Towns; which extraordingry Events humbled their French Monarch to that degree, that in Max: 1709, when the War had continued about, feven Years, he fued for Peace and his Minif-The French ters, who were the Marquissde Torey, and the for Peace.
President de Rouville, met the Duke of Marlborough and the Lord Viscount Townsbend, with the Dutch Pleniporentiaries, at the Hague, where Prince Eugene came also on the Emperor's account. Here the French Ministers offered in their Masters Name, by way: of Preliminary, "That he would consent to the Demolition of Dunkirk.—THAT he " would abandon the Person, called Prince. " of Wales, and send him forth of his Do-1 " minions, That he would acknowledge! " the.

A SUPPLEMENT to the

"the Queen's Title, and the Succession as established on the House of Hanover.—
"That he would renounce all Pretensions to the Spanish Monarchy.—That he would quit his Pretensions to the Towns and Fortresses of Tpres, Furnes, Menin, "Tournay, Liste, Conde, Maubege, and other Places, necessary for a Barrier to the United Provinces. And to the Empire, that he would restore all Things as had been settled by the Treaty of Reswick; and surther, that he would deserted the Fortisications of the City of Straf- burg."

BUT the Duke of Marlborough, the Prince of Savor, and the other Ministers of the consederated Powers, did not look upon these Offers as sufficient from a Prince, who had so often broke through the most Tolemn Engagements, nor fuch as would make sufficient Recompence to each Party, for the vast Charge they had been at, in carrying on the War against him; nor that any Terms obtain'd on that footing, would be a fufficient Sccurity to prevent a War for the future, especially if the Spanish Monarchy should continue in his Grand-son's hands, of which they had already found the dangerous Effects, as he had been thereby enabled to stand out against the most powerful Confederacy that ever was form'd in Europe; and therefore they proposed other Terms tothe French Plenipotentaries, such as they judged would establish a just Bailance of Power, and would give Satisfaction to all the Parties engaged in the War against that Monarch. The principal Confederates were not only agreed as to their own several Demands and Pretentions, so that there was no Misunderstanding among them, but they had also taken care of the Interests of all the reft, referving still a Power of making such further Demands, as might be necessary to render the Peace firm and lasting. The prefent: Emperor, who was then Arch-Duke of Austria, and had been proclaimed King of Spain, was to have had that Monarchy for his Share, and the French King to join with the Allies in all fuch Measures, as should be judg'd necessary to make his Grandson abandon the same, in case of his Refusal. And as Provision was to have been made, that: no Branch of the House of Bourbon should inherit the Spanish Monarchy, so the Emperor was also to have renounced all Title to that Kingdom; and all possible Precaution. was likewise to have been taken, in case of the Emperor's Death without Issue, that Spain and the Empire should not be united. A good and sufficient Barrier was to have been provided for the States-General, according to the Tenure of the Grand Alliance, and Care would have been taken for the effectual Demolition of Dunkirk, and whatever ever might tend to advance the Trade of Great Britain. For in case the Queen had made Peace with France at that time, while her Armies were attended with such continued Sncuess, and while all the Confederates were so unanimous, as she must have been the chief Arbiter in setling every one's Pretensions, so as France on the one hand would not have been in a Condition to have stood out against her Demands, in Matters of Trade; neither could her Allies have opposed any Advantages this Nation should have gained that way, as the Successes against the common Enemy were chiefly owing to the Share Great Britain had taken in the War, and that without consenting to her Demands, their own could not have been answered.

THUS the Plenipotentiaries of the Allies judged nothing less could enable them to treat rightly with France; and tho their Demands were indeed pretty high, both as to the Towns that were to have been given up in Germany, and the Netherlands, and likewise as to Philip's abandoning Spain; vet the French-Ministers consented to them. and the Marquiss de Torcy posted to Versailles, with an Intention as he pretended to get them confirm'd by his Master, alledging that their Instructions did not reach to every particular Article. But the French Forces in Spain, having about this time made themselves Masters of Alicant, and having also also obtain'd a small Victory over a Body of Portuguese, King Lewis thereupon thought fit to delay, till after the Campaign, having a very great Army in the Netherlands, from which he had no small Expectations. But he was greatly disappointed, for the Confederates took Tournay, beat the French in a signal Battle near Mons, and afterwards made themselves Masters of that strong City and Fortress. And before the Summer was ended, the Affairs of Spain took also a Turn, that was very favourable to the Allies; Count Staremberg, who commanded the confederate Forces there, having obtain'd several Advantages over King Philip, whereby that whole Kingdom, which had been in a manner lost after the Battle of Almanza, was now in a fair way of being again recovered by the Confederates: which, with the Loss of Mons and Tournay, proved so great a Mortification to the French King, that in the beginning of the next Year, viz. 1710, he was again very follicitous to renew the Conferences; which accordingly began this Year in March, at Gertruydenburg, and continued till July, when they broke up without coming to any Conclusion: The French having gone back from their former Proposals, and having made new Offers, which were no ways satisfactory to the Allies. The Causes of which, and the extraordinary Events that followed, will now be related at some Length.

Divisions

WHEN Things were thus brought very near to a Crisis abroad, it was observable that an unruly Ferment was working in the Minds of Multitudes of People at home, who were disaffected to the publick Interest, from various Motives, as is usual in all such Circumstances, when the best Measures are on foot. The Duke of Marlborough, who by reason of his great Successes, had obtain'd the chief Sway in all Affairs, was not without Abundance of Enemies who envy'd his good Fortune, tho there was indeed no Man in the Kingdom so fit as himself for the Command of the Army. He was wife in all his Undertakings, having never engaged in any Affair of Moment without Advice, which was a Blemish in King William's Character, who otherwise was a very great General, but would often follow his own Schemes, contrary to the Opinion of his But when the Command best Counsellors. of the Army wasfirst confer'd upon the Duke, tho his Experience in Military Affairs was then but small, yet his Excellency lay in this, that he never did any thing, but in concert with those who had most Experience, and carefully weighed whatever was proposed to him; and having join'd Diligence and Industry along with his other great Talents, he soon excelled all other Men, both in Conduct and Success.

BUT the higher the Duke advanced in Fame, the more he was envy'd, and there were many Circumstances, that concur'd to increase the Number of his Enemies. Especially his vast Riches, and an Opinion many Jealousies had conceived of him, that he was covetous, firred up because he enjoyed so many Places, both of against the Honour and Profit; being not only Com-Marlomander in Chief of the Army, by which he rough. had the Disposal of all Military Employments, but also being Master-General of the Ordnance, and Colonel of the first Regiment of Foot-Guards. The Dutchess was Groom of the Stole to the Queen, and Privy-Purse, whereby she had constantly the Queen's Ear and Pocker; which gave no small Offence to some of the Nobility, who perhaps considered their own Merits, no otherwise than as being of more ancient or greater Extraction than the Duke and Dutchess, and might therefore be displeased that they could not have the Preference in the Queen's Favour.

THE Duke's Family was also very much strengthened in Alliances with other great and powerful Families; for his only Son being dead, he had matched his eldest Daughter to the Lord Treasurer Godolphin's eldest Son. Another he had married to the Earl of Sunderland, who was at that time principal Secretary of State; a third to the Earl of Bridgewater; and the youngest to the present Duke of Montagu, who was then Marquiss of Monthermer, his Father being at that time alive: which created a no small Jealousy among some sort of People, who did all they could to preposses Mens Minds with Fears, lest the Command of the Army, the Treasury, and all Assairs of State, being as it were in the hands of one Family, and the Duke of Marlborough being in such great Authority with the Allies abroad, might be the Means to endanger the Constitution.

THE greatest and ablest Men of the Kingdom, were also of the Duke's Party, and gave their Concurrence to all the Meafures then on foot, both in relation to foreign and domestick Affairs. The Earl Godolphin was an able States-man of long Experience, especially in the Treasury; having been a Commissioner many Years, before he was made Lord Treasurer: and tho he was an honest Man, as appeared afterwards, when a Scrutiny was made into his Conduct, yet being so nearly allied to the Duke, by the strongest Tyes of private Interest, it proved the Means to heighten Peoples Tealousies very much; so that he was by many looked upon as a dangerous Person, to be in fo high a Trust. And therefore this Ministry were never without some Opposition, even when they were in their greatest Vogue, and abundance of pains was taken both in publick publick and private, to embarass their Meafures.

THE late Earl Cowper, who was then some Cha-Lord Chancellor, owed his Rise chiefly to raders of the Lord Treasurer, and the other great Men Men in of that Party. He had a ready Wit and ac-Power. curate Judgment, and was the greatest Ora-tor of his Time. He presided in many Affairs of greatest Moment, particularly at the making of the Union, wherein he acquitted himself so handsomely, as he did on many other publick Occasions, that it might be justly said of him, what Ben Johnson said of the Lord Verulam: " That he com-" manded where he spoke, that he had his " Judges angry and pleased at his Devotion: "That no Man had their Affections more " in his power, and that the Fear of every " Man that heard him, was lest he should

" make an end."

THE Lord Somers, the late Chancellor, was also in great Repute, as an able and grave Counsellor, but was grown somewhat infirm, and therefore unfit for the Toils of Business; tho his Advice was much followed, being an able Lawyer and a Man of great Experience in Affairs. The late Lord Halifax, another very great Man, was in his full Vigour. He had a very extensive Genius, which rendred his Advice useful in all Affairs, besides that he was a Master in all kinds of police Learning, and a Favourer of Men of Merit, which procured him many Friends. The two Secretaries, viz the Earl of Sunderland, the Duke's Son-in-Law, and Mr. Boyle, who was afterwards created Lord Carleton, were both of them Men of great Application and Vigilance, who being allowing their Prime, were therefore the more fit for the valt Burden of Affairs, that lay upon them.

BUT the Earl of Wharton, excelled all others in Readiness of Wit, and Quickness of Penetration. He was also very active and indefatigable, by which he came to know the Strength and Weaknels of those who opposed the publick Measures, and seldom failed to get Intelligence of their most fecret Combinations and Intrigues. He did nor affect formal Speeches, but having a prompt and ready Eloquence join'd with an uncommon Share of Courage, so he never fail'd to encounter those who were of greatest Note, among the oppolite Party; for he could foon differn how far Self prevail'd in any of them, and always laid open their most interested and felfish Views, by the plainest Construction that could be made of their own Words and Actions; and all this with such a peculiar Sharpness of Wit, and with so much Pleasantry, that as his Observations were no less entertaining, than truly convincing to those who heard him speak. to they often put his Adversaries to Confufion and Silence. BE-

BESIDES these, there were many of the Nobility and Gentlemen of best Account, who sided with the Ministry, in all their publick Measures. They had also a Majority among the Bishops, who espoused their Sentiments. As also most of those who were distinguished by their Wit or Learning, who naturally approved their Conduct, because it was the most rational and the most adapted to the Honour and Safety of the Nation. Likewise the Merchants and most Persons concerned in Trade, were generally on this fide, because they looked on their Interest to be altogether precarions, unless such a Ballance should be established, as might put it out of the power of France, or any other Nation, to hurt our Commerce; and as they had this in view, so they all along contributed cheerfully to support the War, and all other Exigencies of the State.

THESE great Men being thus strengthned with so powerful a Body, there seem'd to be no human Probability that any Thing should be able to give them the least Interruption in their Proceedings, much less to move them out of the Queen's Favour, for whom in particular they had done such great Things; having rendered her Name no Iess samous over the World, than that they gave themselves, out to be the only true Friends of the established Church, yet their Principles were generally dislik'd by those who had the best Notions of what was truly for the good of the Nation, and the Protestant Interest, in regard their Schemes were too narrow and limited with respect to other Protestants, and inconsistent with their own Profession, as they generally fell in with Papists and Jacobites, who were known Enemies to the Constitution in Church and State. Neither had they Men who were thought to be of sufficient Reputation to take up the Burden of their Cause, in case they had been able to carry their Point against the Duke of Markborough and his Friends. For the Duke of Ormand was the only Person they could set up as his Competitor, a Man no ways qualify'd for it, his Head being turned more to Show and Oftentation, than to the real Employments of a General; which however rendered him more popular than the other, who studiously avoided all such Things. Mr. Harley Civil Affairs, Robert Harley was the fittest and others Person to be employed, tho' a Man of an whooppor'd who oppor a she Mini- obnoxious Character. He had been thrice stry.

Speaker of the House of Commons, was well acquainted with the Business of that House, and the Characters of the leading Members. He had likewise been one of the principal Secretaries of State, but continued only a short while in that Office, being discarded upon account of one Gregg, a Clerk of the Office, who was executed for keeping a secret Correspondence with France. The Particulars of this Story are sufficiently known to many Persons yet alive, and therefore need not be told here; only thus much, that the Ministry having pressed this Greeg very earnestly, with a Promise of Pardon, in case he had accus'd Harley, which Gregg never would do, this so much disgusted Harley, that he was ever after plotting the Downfall of the Duke of Marlborough and his Party, and therefore fell in with all the Clamours that were rais'd against them. But he lay under several Disadvantages, which very much lessened his Credit, among all forts of People. For even this Affair of Gregg was imputed to his Negligence, by those who believed him to be otherwise innocent. He was not much beloved by either Side; the High-Church Party were afraid to trust him because his Father Sir Edward Harley, and most of his Relations had been Dissenters, and because he came into play first of all by their Interest. The Papifts and Nonjurors us'd to shew no fiking to him, for the same Reason, being always afraid he would prove false to them, as indeed he never discovered any great Forwardness in their Cause. The Dissenters on the other hand were no less jealous of him, because in real Deeds he seem'd to fall in E 3 mostly mostly with their finemics, at the same time he always professed Friendship for them, and gave them good Words. Others looked on him as one who lay always on the Catch, to fall in with either Party, where he could best férve his own Turn. He had also very much impair'd his paternal Estate in the pursuit of his Projects, so that he was looked upon by most People to be a dangerous Person, and there was no great Likelihood, as things went, that he should ever come more upon the Stage. There were besides him some sew other Persons of Nove, who had been in no mean Imployments; particularly Mr. &. John Secretary of War, a very active Man; also Sir Simon Harcourt an able Lawyer, who had been Sollicitor-General; but both were discarded by reason of their Intimacy and Friendship with Harley. But at this time of the day, while the other Party, was so powerful, and confifted of the greatest and most experienced Men of the Nation, these were looked upon as incomsiderable. and the rather that they could not support any Interest without Harley, who was at this time obnoxious to all Sides.

BUT tho' all this promised nothing but the greatest Security to the Duke of Manlborough, and to those who were in Employment with him, such as in all human appearance no Envy or Opposition could well overturn; yet too much Power in the hands of Subjects, whatever good Use may be made of it, often proves injurious to the Posession of it, even when there is the least outward Appearance of Danger. The Papifts both at home and abroad, and those who were in the Pretender's Interest, had gathered very much Strength during the last two Years, but especially when the Negoti-The Nation ations with France broke up, that the Peo-full of Disple were disappointed in their Expectations contents. of Peace; for then they began to complain loudly of the Continuance of the War, which indeed had put a stop to all manner of Trade, whereby the Poor who were wont to be employed in the Manufactures, came to be in a destitute Condition. New Taxes were rais'd that heightened the Price of many necessary Commodities, which fell chiefly on the poorer Sort; which, with the Scarcity of Corn, and the Rife of the Price of Bread at that time, increased their Miseries yery much. And the Land-Tax being continued from Year to Year, at the Rate of four Shillings on the Pound, caused no small Discontent among the Country Gentlemen. that however much they were wont sometimes to applaud the Duke's great Successes. they began now to change their Note, and fell in with those who only envy'd his Fame and great Acquisitions. This gave new Vigour to the Pretender's Friends, who began to be very active, and join'd with Papists to E 4 debauch debauch the Principies of the ignorant forts and many of the Clergy were no less industrious in sowering Peoples Minds with a continual Outcry of the Danger of the Church, from the Favour the Government thewed to the Dissenters; insomuch that the Parliament was forced to make some Refolves to puta stop to this unreasonable Cladeclaring those Enemies to their Country who should affirm the Church of England to be in Danger under her Majesty's Administration.

HOWEVER this was not sufficient to flop Peoples mouths, while they laboured under so many Discontents and Jealousies. The Clergy were encouraged by several ambitious Men of their own Order, who themselves were willing to run no hazard, and by other disgusted Persons of whom they might perhaps expect Favours, in Case of a Change; and no doubt some were excited by their own weak Fears and Jealousies, to utter Things both from the Pulpit and in Conversation, that were seditious and uncharitable, and tended to set the Nation on The Beha-flame: But the great Men generally overviour of look'd this Misbehaviour in the Clergy, and

Clergy perhaps thought it prudent so to do, not only because of their Function, but also because they hoped these Clamours would be at an end, so soon as a Peace should be concluded; which they expected could not be far off, considering the low Ebb things were brought to in France; and it would perhaps have been more advisable for them to have continued in the same Resolution, and either to have still overlook'd their Miscarriages, or only to have suffered the Laws to take place in the common and usual Way against such Persons, than what they did about this time in the Case of Dr. Sacheverel, whose Story must still be so fresh in Memory, that I need not enter upon it as a Thing forgotten or unknown, and which opened a way for the most extraordinary Changes, and fuch a Succession of Events, as perhaps never happened from the like Occasion, as shall here be shewn in as brief a manner as possible.

THIS Sacheverel was the 80n of a Dr. Sacho-Clergyman, and had his Education at On-Gharatter. ford, by the Care of some Benefactors, among whom I have been told Dr. Burnet, Bishop of Sarum, was one. He was noted there as a Person of a very turbulent and litigious Spirit, and but in very little Esteem among them, while he resided with them. He was vain and aspiring beyond measure, and so hasty for his Doctor's Degree, that he bought it before his Time, at a considerable Price. He had such a high Conceit of his own Talents, that he would always be seeking the most publick Opporportunities of exerting them. Towards the latter latter End of the Summer, in 1709, just about the time when the Conferences broke up at the Hague, that the Nation was full of Complaints, he went into Derby bire; where one of the Name of Sacheverel, being High Sheriff that Year, he was by him invited to preach at the Assizes; which Sermon was afterwards printed with a Dedication to the faid Sheriff, wherein were leveral Things teflecting on the Government; and being by some Means or other on the 5th of Nowember following put up to preach before the Lord Mayor of London and Court of Aldermen, he there delivered that Sermon, which made so great a Noise, and brought him upon his Trial.

His feditions Sermon.

HIS Text was on these Words of St. Peul, 2 Corinth. Chap. 11. yer. 26. Perils among false Brethren: Where, instead of commemorating the Deliverances that happened on that Day, first by the Discovery of the Powder Plot, and afterwards by King William's Landing, whereby the Protestant Religion was twice under God preserved to this and other Nations, as well as our Civil Liberties; he, (to the great Surprize of most of those who heard him) by several plain Inferences, while he was pressing Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance, sell foul on the Revolution and all who espoused such Principles, as being Enemies to their Country. The Duke of Mark

Marlberough and the rest of the Ministry. these also in both Houses of Parliament who adhered to them, were the false Brethren he aimed at, because of the Toleration Act which they supported, and which he compared to the Trojan-Horse full of Arms and Blood, that would one time or other pull down the Established Church. He made several fly Infinuations against some of the Bishops and other Clergymen, who were not Men of his own Sentiments, (even not foaring his Benefactors) who from Motives of Charity and the Rules of good Policy, concurred with the State in shewing Favour to the Diffenters. Nor did he confine himself to the Living only, but also raked into the Ashes of the Dead, by falling on those who in former Times had been of the same Principles; particularly Archbishop Grindal, whom he called a perfidious Prelate and a false Son of the Church, because he had favoured the Puritans in his Time. withstanding that Reverend Father was a Man of an Exemplary Life; was one of the Compilers of the Book of Common-Prayer, and an Exile in Queen Mary's Reign for his steady adherence to the Protestant Cause. In short, his whole Sermon was nothing but a Heap of feditious and uncharitable Invectives, full of high-founding Words and pompous Comparisons, the better to inflame the Minds of the Multitude; and to this end end he also misapply'd both Scripture and History, and all with an Air of the greatest Assurance.

IT may well be remembred what Noise this Sermon made, being delivered before the chief Persons of the City of London, where most of the Supplies were usually raised, and People spoke as they were affected, some applauding the Preacher's Zeal and Courage, others were aftonished at his Affurance, and looked upon him as a turbulent Fellow and a mischievous Incendiary, to vent such false Invectives in so solemn 2 Place, especially at a time which called for the greatest Unanimity. But when this Sermon was printed, it made still a far greater Noise, and was soon spread into all Parts of the Kingdom; so that the Ministry taking great Offence thereat, and their Patience being quite tir'd out with many other Complaints of the same kind, that came from all Quarters, resolved to bring this bold Offender to trial, that they might deter others from the like Practices. For little or nothing was heard from the Pulpit in many Places, especially from the younger Sort of Clergymen, but the Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance, with such Inferences, as might give People a Dislike to the Ministry, the Revolution-Principles and all the Laws and Constitutions founded upon them; tho indeed Dr. Sacheverel had of all others rendered himself the most obnoxious to Censure, both because of the place where his Sermon was preached, and likewise because the printing of that Sermon had brought it into every body's hands, and made it a Bone of Contention among all sorts of People throughout the Kingdom.

ABOUT this time the Parliament mee at Westminster, where Complaint being made of the Sermon, it was produced, and feveral Paragraphs in it were read, with the Dedication of the Sermon preach'd at Derby, in order to his Impeachment before the Lords. But some opposed this Method of proceeding, thinking it would be doing the Doctor too much honour, and that the Time was not very seasonable to make too great a noise about him, which this would do, and by that means might increase his Party, considering how much the Generality of the Clergy were disgusted; and therefore judged it more advisable to have him try'd before some inferiour Court. This was the wifest Advice, as appear'd afterwards. But the Majority falling in with the Great Men, who were for his Impeachment; and those who favour'd the Doctor's Cause being in hopes of some happy Turn by this solemn and august Way of Proceeding, as it would alarm the Nation, did therefore all they could underhand to press it forwards. Whereupon the House resolved.

ved, "That both the Books were malf"cious, scandalous, and seditious Libels,
"reflecting on the Queen and her Govern"ment, the Revolution and Protestant Suc"cession, and upon both Houses of Par"liament, tending to alienate the Minds
"of her Majesty's good Subjects, and to "create Jealousies and Divisions among "them." The Doctor being also taken into custody, the Commons moved to draw up Articles of Impeachment against him, in order to his Trial. Accordingly they charged

He is impeached by the House of Com-

the Doctor with High Crimes and Mislemeanours, which they fund up in four Articles, founded upon the above-mentioned Refelve. and appointed Managers to carry on the Trial; viz. Mr. Boyle, who was fince created Lord Carleton, then one of the Principal Secretaries of State; Sir Robert Walpale; Sit Peter King, the present Lord Chancellot; Sit Thomas Parker, the late Chancellor; Mr. Cowper; Brother to the late Lord of that Name, afterwards Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Sir Joseph Jekyll, the present Master of the Rolls; the late Lord Lechmere, Arrorney-General; Mr. Pulteney; Mr. Smith, one of the Tellers of the Exchequer; Mr. Hambden, and some others, all Persons of Note, and several of them Men of great Probity and Sufficiency. The Doctor was allowed to have for his Counsel, Sir Simon Harcourt, who was a Rival Rival to some of the great Men, and had no small influence on those who opposed the Court; Sir Constantine Phipps; and Mr. Dee, a Civilian; besides several others who were Assistants, all of them Men devoted to the Doctor's Cause, except Mr. Dodd, who was afterwards made Lord

Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

THE Managers, in making good the Articles of Impeachment, discussed many things of Importance to the Nation, wherein Prople had been mif-led by the Doctor and other fuch Engines. The Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Reliftance, which had been to often made use of as a Handle to gratify Mens private Views, and to cast an Odium on the Revolution, thereby to influence Peoples Minds against the Succession in the House of Hanover, was exposed as seditions, when preached up to serve those pernicious Ends; and such Persons were proved Enemies to the Nation, who made this their constant Topick, at a time when none of the Subjects had in the least opposed the Queen and Government, but had contributed cheerfully in all Exigencies against the common Enemy: And that these Preachers were themselves the only Persons guilty of the Crimes against which they inveigh'd so loudly in their Sermons. Resistance made at the Revolution in 1688, was justify'd, where there was a total Subversion version of the Religion, Laws and Liberties of the People; and as it was begun and carry'd on with the Concurrence and Voice of the His Trial. whole Nation, so it was warranted from Reason and the constant Practice of this Kingdom; the Subjects having in all times of Danger stood up in defence of their Liberties. The just Rights of the Royal Prerogative and the Rights of the Subjects were both fet forth and maintain'd, according to the Fundamental Constitution of England. The Honour of the Government was also vindicated, and the Toleration granted to Protestant Dissenters, warranted, as being altogether confistent with the Safety of the Established Church, and not only agreeable to Christian Charity, but to that Clemency and Tenderness which all good Governments ought to shew, to every pair of the Community.

THE SE being the chief Matters wherein the Doctor had given Offence, the Managers therefore insisted much upon them in their Pleadings, so as to make out the Charge against him in each Article; besides his Blunders, his false Application of Scripture and other Particulars, which some of them thought sit also to animadvert upon, perhaps that his Friends might not think too highly of him: for the common People, and those who were fond of Novelties, began to idolize him very much. The Bishops being being likewise required to give their Opinion in this Trial, to satisfy those who might think the Doctor hardly dealt with, in case the Bishops had been altogether silent. Therefore several of that Reverend Bench spoke their Minds freely, particularly Dr. Burnet Bishop of Sarum, an honest publickspirited Man, who was very zealous and active for the Protestant Interest and the Succession in the House of Hanover, and had been formerly no less active and zealous for the Revolution, which rendered him very obnoxious to all the disaffected Party. This Reverend Prelate recited most of the Transactions of that and the preceding Times, wherein he set forth the ill use had been made of the Doctrine of Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance to carry on the Designs of some bad Men, and in particular to flatter weak or bad Princes in their Encroachments on their Subjects Liberties. and made just Observations on the Calamities which such things had brought upon the Nation. The present Bishop of Durham spoke also on the same Side, and Dr. Trimnel, who was then Bishop of Norwich, tho a Man of a mild peacable Disposition, yet could not forbear taking notice of the evil Tendency of that Sermon, and therefore gave his Judgment against it. But Dr. Wake, the present Archbishop of Canterbury, who was then Bishop of Lincoln, canvassed every part of the Sermon very narrowly, and confirm'd all the Managers had said to make out the Charge on each Article, by giving a further Insight into the Tendency of his whole Discourse; which he did with great Judgment and Perspicuity, and that by the most fair and candid Construction that could be put upon it; having also taken notice, as some of the Managers had done before, that the Doctor had misapply'd History and Scripture to promote those Designs which had been charged upon him, in the Articles of Impeachment.

NOW it was the Design of the Ministry and the other leading Men in both Houses, to expose the unreasonableness of the Complaints that had been made against the Government, and they were in hopes fuch a publick Trial might be the Means to make the whole Nation sensible how much they had been imposed on by those, who from a false Pretence of Religion and Zeal for the Established Church, were only carrying on such Designs as might in the end destroy the Constitution, or at least might have this unhappy Effect, to retard the Measures that were then on foot against the common Encmy. But how far they succeeded in this, was foon manifest from the Changes that happened. For this extraordinary way of proceeding against the Doctor, instead of conthem the more outrageous. And as the unufual Solemnity of the Trial made a very great noise, not only throughout this Nation, but over all Europe, so those who were Enemies to the common Cause and the Welfare of England improved every Circumstance to incense the People more than ever against the Government; and that which encouraged them above all things, was a Rumour that the Queen secretly savoured the Doctor's Cause, which in the Issue proved teue, as will anon appear.

DURING the time of this long Trial, which lasted most part of the Spring, there happened great Disorders in diverse Parts of the Kingdom, stirred up by disaffected Persons; and at London the Doctor was every day attended to Westminster, and back to the Temple, where he lodged, with very great Crowds of Rabble, who infulted all Persons whom they met unless they would join with them in their Huzza's and Acclamations of Applause to the Doctor and High-Church for ever, which was their common Cry. This was at first in some measure overlook'd by the Government, who probably imagin'd that fort of People: would soon be tird out with their daily Attendance, or at least as most of them were Servants and Apprentices, that their Masters would not permit them long to leave their Business

Business: but it happened quite otherwise; for the Disaffection became like a contagious Distemper, which seizes without distinction. The Servants were encouraged by their Masters, and Money was given to spirit up the Mob, who went in great Bodies and pulled down several of the Dissenters Meeting Houses, and committed many other Outrages, until a stop was put to their Career, by fending Soldiers among them. But when these Tumults were suppressed about London, the Mob in the Country fell upon the Meeting Houses in several other Towns and Cities; and not only insulted the Difsenters, but those who favoured them, being encouraged and connived at by Mayors, Justices, and other Officers of the Peace. By this means his Cause gathered strength, and Reports were spread throughout the whole Kingdom, that he had been profecuted for no other reason, but his Adherence to the Church and Monarchy, which were industriously put together, that those who had called him to account for his Doctrines. might be looked upon as Persons of Antimonarchical Principles, and Enemies to the Established Church; which gave the generality of People, (who were now grown in a manner infatuated) very ill Impressions of the Ministry, by which means the great Things they had done for the Honour and Safety of the Nation and the Good of all Christendom, Christendom, were in a great measure trans-

BUT besides the restless Endeavours of openly disaffected Persons, who had a deep Share in all these Disorders; the Methods taken by the Doctor's Friends in his Trial, contributed also very much to give strength to that Cause, by bringing him into great Credit as an honest and publick-spirited Man, who had flood up manfully in a time of imminent Danger. His Counsel being sensible that the Infinuations of his Sermon were so Methods open and barefac'd that they might justly promote render him obnoxious to Censure and Pu-the Docnishment, did therefore all that was in their tor's Cause. power, both in the Answers, to the Articles of Impeachment, and in their Pleadings, to clear his Intentions from the Imputation of Distoyalty to the Queen, and Disrespect to the Government. The like Care was taken of his Speech, which made so great noise; in composing of which, besides his Counsel, some Clergymen were thought to be concerned; viz. Dr. Atterburry, Dr. Moss and Dr. Smallridge; because they were frequentally with him in Westminster-Hall, and at his Apartments in the Temple. Atterbury was a proud obstinate Man, and a hot Stick-ler against Men of moderate Principles, which caused him to be much cry'd up by some fort of People, the he was no Friend to the present happy Establishment, as has F 3

Ance been made manifest. He had the Reputation of being a fine Preacher, but his Delivery was so affected, that many of the vounger Clergymen studying to imitate him. rendered themselves very ridiculous by it. Moss was also esteem'd for his preaching, But Dr. Smallridge had most Leasnings he was modest withal, but having been much at Oxford, he there imbibid longs narrow Principles, the otherwise he was reckoned a deserving Man. Besides Dr. Smallridge, there were allo some other Persons of good Reputation, both among the Nobility, the Bishops and Clergy, who at the same time they did not altogether approve of the Xim lency and Bitternow of Ahad Octor's Sermon, yet fell into the fame Sentiments ; among whom was Sk William Dawas then Bishop of Chefter, Dr. Shapp Archhilhop of Terk, and Dr. Compton Bishop of London, The two last were the more regarded, that shey stood up so strenuously against the Arbitrary Measures of King James's Reign, but being both grown very old and infirm, were now much abused by Atterbury and some other Clergymen, who kept a constant Watch over them, and took the advantage of their great Age, and their Inability to go abroad, ro impole many Falshoods upon them, Nevertheless those who affected a more than ordinary Zeal for the Established Church, thought the better of their Cause, that that two Prelates of so great Reputation patronized it: And when the Doctor's Speech came to be published, tho as to the matter of it, there was neither that Submission shewn to the Government, nor that charitable Temper which became a Christian Minister, yet as they had been careful to avoid such Bitterness of Expression as was in the Sermon, and likewise to colour over some things that had given Offence, so it had a very bad Tendency.

THIS Speech contain'd many Insults, cloath'd under the foft Appearance of Duty and Humility, and was full of the most sotemn Protestations of his Innocency; so that it could not fail to gain upon the ignorant fort, and those who were prejudiced against the publick Measures. A way was also opened into the Queen's Favour by many flattering Protestations for her Honour and Safety; and the better to impose on the Queen and the High-Church Party, References were made to the Writings of feveral Bishops, and other Eminent Divines. concerning Passive-Obedience and Non-Resistance, and to the Homilies concerning Rebellion; which were publish'd with his Speech, that it might be thought he had preached no other Doctrines than those of the Church of England; and to put the best Colour upon his Insinuations against the Toleration, those Persons were only complain'4 plain'd of, who would conform meerly for the fake of Imployments in the Government, and upon no other account. Some licentious Passages extant in divers Books and Libels were also publish'd, as those things against which the Doctor had in-yeigh'd with so much warmth in his Sermon; which being mentioned in this Speech with a Concern such as seem'd becoming a Minister of the Gospel, his Zeal and Conduct was therefore much approved. But as most People saw plainly that the Drift of this Sermon was against the Toleration, which was become very odious after all this Noise about it; so it was made use of as a further Aggravation against the Ministry, that they had suffered such impious Books to be printed, without inflicting some exemplary Punishment on the Authors and Publishers of them, And therefore those in Power were in all places represented as Perfons who countenanced Schism, and all manner of Irreligion; whereby the Speech had a worse effect upon the Publick than the Sermon, not withstanding the Managers made it appear that the Authors of some of these Books had been prosecuted, that others had been dead a long time, and that some of these Books had been printed abroad, and were sent over privately into the Kingdom; and that others were so very insignificant, h'at they had lain several Years in Obscurity, until the Doctor and his Friends had reviyed them, to evade the Charge brought against him. Upon the whole, the Doctor His sm. was voted guilty by a great Majority; his rence. two Sermons were ordered to be burnt by the hands of the common Hangman, and himself forbid to preach for three Years. The Lords also, to shew their just Indignation against the Books produced by the Doctor, ordered them likewise to be burnt in the same manner. And when the Queen came to the House in April following, she declared her Resentment particularly against those who had taken false Impressions, from the Artifices made use of to impose on the Publick a Belief that the Church was in danger, because some licentious Libels had crept forth, which the faid was an Evil com-plain'd of in all Ages, and could not be alrogether prevented by the greatest Care and Vigilancy. In the same Speech she took. notice, that as she had at all times been forward to suppress Vice and Irreligion, so she was ready to give Assent to any good Laws that should be thought of, utterly to discountenance all such Licentiousness.

HITHERTO the Queen spoke the Sentiments of her Ministers, tho by this time her Mind was very much alienated from them. And it was even observed after the Death of the Prince of Denmark her Husband, which happened near two Years be-

. forç

A. SUPPLEMENT to the fore this Trial, that the grew more cold and indifferent towards them, than when he was alive. That Prince being somewhat machine, neither affected the Grandeur of a Crown, not the Tolls of Bulinels, the he had right Sentiments concerning the publick Affairs. He was always for a strict Harmony with the Allies aproad, and being himfelf of a different Profession from the Established Church; was by that means allo a Friend to the Toleration. the Queen, as to her private Opinion, was of another mind: only out of respect to the Prince, and because the Toleration was granted before her Time, the also comply'd with the Continuance of it. She was indeed religiously inclined, but fell in chiefly with those whose Principles were the most fliff and rigid; who prepoffested her strongly against the Dissenters, as being a turbu-lent factions fort of People, and the chief Instruments of the Calamities that fell upon her Grandfather King Charles the First; tho it has appeared by many Discoveries made fince his Time, that most of those Evils were owing to some Defects in his Education, and tome peculial Weaknesses in him-The Queen was also as to her Temfuperiour pretence of Duty and Loyalty, and Concern for her Prerogative. Besides this, she had been for several Years afflicted with the Gout and other bodily Insirmities, and in her widowed State she was apr to think herself neglected upon every occasion, because some might no doubt take more upon them now, than when the Prince was alive.

HOWEVER, these Weaknesses in the Queen, and the want of some little Observance, in the Ministry, made way for those who before had most of her Affection. And it was much taken notice of, that Mr. Harley had frequent, access to her during the Trial, occasion'd partly by his own deluding Address, and partly by the Instances of some Clergymen, who were continually buzzing strange Stories into her cars. offor tho the Clergy were not without sheir Jealousies of him, as a Person who could not safely be intrusted with their Interests; yet he soon overcame all this, and infinuated himfelf very much into their Favour, the Time being now the most feasonable, when they were impatient for a Change, and could not fix their Eyes upon any other fo well qualified to effect it; and therefore they did all they could to establish him with the Queen, which was the more easy, that the Queen herself had always a particular liking to him. Besides him, several others also got Admittance privately upon the same account, who were not a little instrumental" in her coming every day to the House during the Trial, notwithstanding her bad State of Health. Where altho her Title was fully afferted on the foot of the Revolution, as the best Security of her Crown and Dignity, yet these Persons who were now got so much into her good Graces, represented it as a very bold and insolent Attempt; in her Subjects, to presume to argue a Point in her Royal Presence, which concerned her so nearly. That this was the highest affront they could put upon her, and could have no other Tendency than to make her look despicable in the Eyes ofher People. Several Expressions of the Managers were taken hold of, and interpreted to'a very bad Sense. and the whole Matter of the Trial was represented as a Combination in favour of some Designs in the Ministry, which were with much Industry given out to be against her Majesty's Honour and the Good of the Conflitution. The Sufferings of Dr. Sacheverel were represented to be very hard and unwarrantable, and as they took all imaginable pains to colour over his Crimes, fo they infinuated that his Loyalty to her Person, and Zeal for the Established Church, had been the chief Cause of their Resentment against him.

THESE Infinuations could not fail of having a very sensible Effect on the Queen's Mind, especially since all imaginable pains was also taken to magnify the Duke of Marlborough's Power and great Interest, not only as it stood with the Allies abroad, but with his Kindred and other great Men at home, also with the trading part of the Nation, and with the Majority of both Houses of Parliament, especially the Commons, who were faid to be entirely at his devotion. All which heightened the Queen's Fears and Jealousies to that degree, that she looked upon the Duke with the same Difpleasure as if he had been her Rival, and therefore shereceived him and her other Ministers but coldly and with a kind of Resentment; which they easily perceived, tho they seem'd not to regard it very much, being perhaps but too confident of their own Strength, and too apt to despise those whom they knew to be the Instruments of her Displeasure.

NEVERTHELESS this was a Prelude to their Downfal; for tho the opposite Party had neither the soundest Heads nor the fullest Purses among them, yet they were their grown the most numerous, the most active strength to promote their Cause, and the most noisy, besides that they had a great Majority of the Clergy; so that nothing was heard but soud Complaints against the Ministry, with a Presumption that they were soon to be discarded, and great Rejoicings were made very infultingly all over the Kingdom, by Bonfires and ringing of Bells, upon account of Dr. Sacheverel's mild Sentence, which they interpreted as a certain forerunner of Victory on their side. This was attended with warm Disputes every where, concerning the State of Affairs: for besides that many were disgusted upon account of the Toleration, the Ministry were no less sufpected with regard to their Friendship for the Allies, which was not a little grievous to the concerning Pretender's Friends, and others in the French of Affairs. Interest, who always long'd to see this Knot unloos'd; and therefore those who stood up for the Ministry, endeavoured to set off their Proceedings as the most wise and rational, and most for the Honour and Safety of the Nation. They commended their Steddiness in keeping so close to the Confederates, not only as this was agreeable to the Grand Alliance, but besides that any thing to the contrary would be dishonourable to the Queen and Nation, so it would be imprudent to defert the Allies, when things were brought fo near to an happy Issue, and that all of them continu'd so unanimous in their Efforts against the common Enemy. That a Breach at such an unscasonable time, might not only recover the Affairs of the French King, especially that so much of the Spanish Monarchy was still in the possession of his Grandson, but

but it would render the Allies averse from soining with this Nation in any time to come, lest they should again be deserted, when they had exhausted their Blood and Treafure as in this long War, but would rather comply with the best Terms they could get, than depend any more upon the Friendship of Britain, which in process of time might prove an unspeakable detriment to her, who could not subsist long unless a Ballance was preserved, which she alone was not in a condition to maintain without the Concurrence of other Nations; and therefore they approved what was done the preceeding Year at the Hague, because the obtaining good Conditions for every one of the Allies, was the likeliest way to procure right Terms for Great Britain, as this in effect put the Power wholly in the Queen, and rendered her the chief Arbiter in the Affairs of Europe. And as the Protestant Religion was a prime Motive to engage the chief Protestant Powers in this long and expensive War; that therefore the Ministry had suited all their Schemes to its Advancement, and might reap this Advantage from their Steddiness, that they would in all likelihood procure such Stipulations as might secure to the Protestants in the Roman Catholick Countries, the free Exercise of their Religion, in opposition to all future Attempts of their Enemies. And having this in view, they alledged it would have been altogether absurd in them, to countenance any Measures that had a Tendency to oppress Protestants of whatever Denomination, and that therefore they did well in maintaining the Toleration; which was also the more reasonable, because those who were of most account among the Difsenters, differed but little in many things from the Established Church, and in all their Maxims and Sentiments were equally oppofite to Popery and Arbitrary Power. It was also pleaded in behalf of the Dissenters, that they had all along behaved as Loyal Subjects to the Queen, and had cheerfully contributed their Share in all publick Exigences; and that the better Sort among them had always shewn themselves ready to cultivate every thing that might promote Unity among Protestants, which had been the means to gain them so much Favour with the Govern-Further, that the French Protestants and other Foreigners who shared in this Indulgence, had been no less dutiful. That the French were also very industrious, and therefore that the Ministry looked upon them as deserving the Encouragement that was given them; especially that they were in all respects firmly attached to the publick Interest, against which they could not act without manifest detriment to their own.

THESE and many other things were arged in behalf of the Ministry; while, on the

the other hand, the Agents of the opposite Party, who were very numerous, proved no less active in running down all their Schemes as detrimental to the Nation. These fell upon many specious Arguments which carry'd a fair outfide Appearance, and were such as had been dictated by those who were now got pretty much about the Queen. They alledged the Confederates were infatiable, in refusing to come to Terms with France, after such good Offers had been made; and in particular, that the Ministry had not consulted the true Interest of their Country, in acquielcing so far with the Allies, since K. Lewis made no scruple in yielding to the specifick Demands of Great Britain. That as the British Nation had so great Dependance on her Trade, it could not be her Duty or her Interest to oblige the Confederates to her own Ruin, by continuing the Expence of a Land-War. England was able to stand on her own Bottom, and needed not fear what foreign Nations could do to her; but that she would become a Prey and a Bubble to all the World, if her whole Substance should be run out to aggrandize other Nations, and inrich the Ministry. They ascribed the Miscarriages in all the late Negotiations to their Stiffness, and gave it as the Reason why the French King went back from his first Offers, in hopes to exhaust the Substance of the

the Nation, to tire People's patience, and by that means to bring England to his own Terms. They also found great fault with their Conduct in managing the War, and opposed many idle and impracticable Dreams of their own to the wife Measures of the Confederates; and as they fell in altogether with the Stream against the Toleration, and other Acts of Clemency towards the French Protestants who had taken sanctuary in the. Kingdom, and as this happen'd to displease the generality of the common People in their present Circumstances, who envy'd the French, because they had by their Industry and Parsimony throve very much; so there fell out some other Matters. Which were improved to increase the publick Difcontents. The Ministry had but lately given encouragement for the coming of fome Foreigners into the Kingdom from the Palatinate, who had suffered both on account of their Religion, and by the Depredations of the French Armies; and therefore made their humble Supplication to the Queen, that they might be permitted to transplant themselves hither, which she by her Ministers Advice consented to. Whereupon 3 or 4000 Palatines came over in great diffress; but being bred in a Country where the People are but firtle acquainted with Trade. by that means many of them were fit for nothing but Husbandry and Day-Labour, and at this Time of the day there was no want of such Persons, there being scarce sufficient Business to employ the Inhabitants. Also there happen'd to be a great many Roman Catholicks among them, who came along with the rest, in hopes to find a better livelyhood here than in their own Country; besides, many Women and Children, which made them still the more burdensome, so that the Government was forced for the present to encamp them upon Black Heath near London, and to allow them a daily subsistance until they could be otherwife disposed of. This falling out at such an unseasonable time, created great Heartburnings among the common People, who did by no means like to see Strangers come among them in that poor despicable manner, when themselves lay under such Discouragements, and being continually stirr'd up by bad Instruments, could not be kept within the rules of common Decency; but The Minisopenly arraign'd the Ministry as persons try arraign'd by who studied every way to ruin, and oppress the Paper their Country. But nothing was so much lace. improved to the detriment of the Ministry, as the Duke of Marlborough's great Power and Interest, both at home and abroad: which they pretended to be more dangerous to the Nation than any efforts could be made by the common Enemy; because, said they, if a Period was once put put to the War according to his own Terms; there could be nothing to hinder the Duke from setting himself up as Perpetual Dicator, and might alter the Conflitution, both in Church and State, as he should think fit: Especially that the Queen was without Issue, a Widow, and of an infirm Constitution, and could do nothing to oppose him, he having also the Army at his devotion. As this first of all had alarm'd the Queen, so the same Jealousy soon spread over the whole Kingdom: which rais'd fuch a torrent against the Ministry, that it became easy for the Queen to effect what she had so much wish'd for, viz. to abridge their Power, which she began to put in execution so soon as the Parliament was prorogu'd.

THE Conferences at Gertruydenbergh, which we have already had occasion to advantage mention, were continued this Year from the beginning of March to the Month of from the Divisions' July; and tho they were very earnestly in this follicited by the French King in January, and would in all probability, have ended in an advantageous Peace to this Nation, and to all the Allies, had things continued on the same footing in England; yet now that all was in confusion, that Monarch did nothing but start new difficulties, in hopes to reap some advantage from the Troubles of this Nation: which which were not a little increased by his Randing out. The Dutch Plenipotentiaries were impower'd by the other Allies, to hear what the French would propose, in order to a general Treaty, before any of them should have the trouble to fend their Ministers thither. But tho it was agreed to, that the French King's Grandson might have part of the Dominions in Italy, which belong'd to Spain, particularly. Sicily and Sardinia, whereby a Patition was to have been made of that Monarchy; yet they could bring him to no certain Resolution, as to his Grandson's leaving Spain: he had promised to withdraw his Forces out of that Kingdom, and that he would forbid his Subjects to list in his Service, but would not consent to join with the Allies in any proper Measures, that might oblige him to abandon the faid Kingdom. And when the matter was pressed home more peremptorily by the Dutch Plenipotentiaries; he, lest he should disgust his own Subjects, who were ready to rise in Tumults in several places, because of the War. would not break off the Treaty, but promised to assist the Confederates with Money, tho he could not be brought to give fecurity how that Money should be paid; nor would he propose any right Security, whereby the Allies might enter upon any formal Treaty with him. And when afterwards wards the Negotiations were broke off, he published circular Letters all over his Dominions, wherein several Expressions were made use of, to quiet the Minds of his own Subjects on the one hand, and on the other to foment the Differences that were begun in Great Britain, by protesting his own Sincerity in his Desires of Peace, and ascribing all the Miscarriages thereof to the unreasonable Demands of the Allies, being fuch as were entirely out of his power to perform: which being translated into our English News-Papers, were not without the Effect which the French King intended by them, as they increas'd People's Murmurs and Discontents, which were greatly set forward by the French Agents in this Kingdom, and by all who wished the Downfal of the Duke of Marlborough and the Ministry.

THE SE things contributed to make way for the Changes that soon happened; for when the Parliament was prorogu'd after the breaking up of the said Conferences, and that most of the Members were gone to their Seats in the Country, and when the Duke of Marlborough was also gone over to the Army, the Queen by the Advice of Mr. Harley, and some others of his Party, sent the Earl of Wharton over into Ireland as her Lieutenant, for they were afraid to attempt any Change, until that great Man whom they stood greatly in awc. As for the Duke of Marlborough, he proved no less successful than at other times, for this Summer he took from the French, Aire, Doway and Fort Scharpe, after having furmounted many Difficulties; and in Spain Affairs took also a very favourable Turn, by reason of several important Victories gain'd by the Confederates there, infomuch that Count Staremberg would have gone to Madrid, had he not been hindered by the Dilatoriness of the Portugueze, who stay'd to get in their Harvest. But in England all things were in great disorder. Addresses were sent from divers parts of the Kingdom, wherein the Ministry and Parliament were insulted, notwithstanding none of the Ministers were yet out of Place, nor the Parliament dissolved. These were however at first suppressed, and enquiry being made after the Promoters of them, some of them were found to be Nonjurors, who upon this Enquiry went from their Houses, until the Queen began to make some Changes, after which they were published in all the News-Papers, and others of the same kind were sent to the Queen, wherein the Addressers stiled themselves the only true and genuine Sons of their Holy Mother the Church of England, with abundance of such sounding Appellations, that they might the more effedually heighten the Jealousy the People had entertained in their Minds, concerning the Danger of the Church; and one of these was indeed conceived in such Words as if all had been at stake, affuring the Queen that they would defend her Royal Title and Prerogative, and her Hereditary and Indefeafible Right, in opposition to all the late Attempts made against her sacred Person and Government; and the Church of England as by Law chablished, in opposition to Phanaticks and all Persons of antimonarchical, heretical or atheistical Principles. After this manner were several of these new Addreffes pen'd; which althothey look'd more like Banter than any thing else, and seem'd to strike at the Protestant Succession, yet most of them being graciously received by the Queen, it set the whole Nation into the greatest surprize, as this was indeed giving the Royal Attestation to all the Scandal and Lyes that were cast upon the Ministry and their whole Proceedings. The Pulpit was also strangely abused with Discourses, that made for nothing but Strife and Contention, such being now become the most popular and the best received.

THE Queen was all this while changing her Ministers, having begun with Earl Sunderland, one of her principal Secretaries of State, who was succeeded by the Lord Dartmouth. This piece of News was soon inserted in the Paris Gazette, with Notice that the said

Earl was Son-in-Law to the Duke of Marlborough. Their other News-Papers were also filled with all the domestick Feuds and the ridiculous Behaviour of the Parties in Great Britain, which were told with an Air of Triumph, and helped very much to raise the drooping Spirits of the French. About the same time Mr. Boyle the other Secretary resigned, and was succeeded by Mr. St. John. The Treasury was put into Commission, and Mr. Harley made Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Lord Cowper also resign'd, Changes in and was succeeded by Sir Simon Harcourt, the Minif-Dr. Sacheverel's chief Agent, who was first "y. made Keeper of the great Seal, and afterwards Lord Chancellor. The Dukes of Bucking hamsbire and Shrewsbury, and some others had also great Employments conferr'd upon them. For most of the great Men who had been in Power refign'd, when Sunderland and the Lord Treasurer Godolphin were dismiss'd, in hopes those who were coming into their Places, would not be able to hold it long, being most of them Persons who had been but a short while in Employments of the State, and therefore but little acquainted with the vast Burden of the present Affairs, which by the Continuance of the War was very much increas'd; besides that this new Party had but few Friends among the money'd Men, so that it was generally believed they could not be able to support the publick Credit, Credit, which began to fink very much already upon these Alterations.

HOWEVER the new Ministry continued to pursue all such Measures as might best secure themselves, both in the Queen's Favour and with the People, being sensible they could not be rightly established without a Parliament of their own Kidney, who should fall in with them in all their Schemes, Therefore the Queen, who was now wholly at their devotion, after several Prorogations, dissolved the Parliament then in being, and called another to meet at the usual Time.

A new Parliament called.

THE latter Part of the Year was spent in the new Elections, which were very tumultuous; for most of the common People had taken such an Aversion to the late Ministry from the Clamours had been raised against them, that they were ready to knock down every one who offer'd to appear on their side; so that many who came to the places of Election were deter'd from giving their Votes. Several Stratagems were also fet on foot to keep up this Spirit in the People, and every Accident was improved or had a Tendency to the same End. cheverel being presented to a new Living in Wales after his Trial, by a Bigot of his Party, took a Progress down into that Country thro Oxford, where his old Companions, who us'd formerly to be in no good Terms

Terms with him, receiv'd him now with great Ceremony, and with many stiff Cringes and Complements. From thence he passed through Worcester and some other great Towns, where he was received with ringing of Bells and loud Acclamations, the Houses being stuck out with green Boughs or hung with Carpets for the Reception of this great Apostle. He was also met upon the Road in most Places, by Sheriffs of Counties and Justices of the Peace, having several Invitations to their Houses, tho by some he was insulted as a vain Impostor. This Cavalcade made a great noise; the Journals of each Day's Progress being printed in all the News-Papers, and by that means soon spread through the whole Kingdom. Tho it was generally believed that he went in this publick Manner, more out of Vanity and a Desire of Applause, than from any other View; for he was even by the wifer Sort of his own Friends, looked upon as a weak vain Man; yet it is impossible to imagine how much this inflam'd People's Minds, which were before heated and intoxicated, so as to in-fluence them in their Votes; who became the more obstinate in the Cause, the more the Doctor was exposed and ridicul'd for his Folly. And the Heads of that Party having also got the Power into their hands, influenced many of the Electors by fair Promises miles and other Artifices, so that they carried their Point without much difficulty.

ON the second of January following this new Parliament met, and chose Mr. Bromley for their Speaker, and great The Meet- were all Mens Expectations, to know what

ing of the Measures they would follow; whether they would immediately address the Queen to enter upon Negotiations of Peace, or to continue the War; for in case of the latter, it was doubted whether their Credit would be sufficient for it: The Nobility and Gentlemen of best account in the Kingdom, the most considerable Citizens of London. and the richest Inhabitants of the other trading Towns, adhering stedfast to the late Ministry, and shewing the greatest unwillingness imaginable to trust those new Stewards with their Money. And the Courtiers were so sensible of their own Weakness in this respect, that they had encouraged all Reports that favour'd of Peace; their Dependants had also given out many false and scandalous Surmises, both in their Converfation and in printed Pamphlets, that the Nation was not in a Capacity to carry on the War any longer. This was the Reason of Peoples Doubts in this grand Concern, which afforded but a melancholy Prospect to those who had intrusted their Money in the Publick, because they could hope for no good Terms, when those who should be the Managers of the Peace, had by their own Agents run down the Circumstances of the Nation, because their own Credit was not sufficient to carry on the War so as to obtain such safe and honourable Conditions as might be expected, and likewise because they knew the Continuance of the War to be contrary to their Design of strengthening their Party with Papists and Nonjurors, who had no other Prospect but from France, and were therefore averse to every thing that might further weaken the Power of that Nation.

THESE Things, brought the Ministry into a very great Dilemma upon their first fetting out, and it required a no small Share of Conduct to extricate themselves out of it, considering they had a powerful Party to deal with, who might not only bring The Conthem to a severe Account, if things should dut of the be carried too far on the side of France by try. their Mismanagement, but might even overturn their Power before they had fully fecured themselves, if they should make their Designs plainly known to the Publick. And therefore the Duke of Marlborough was still continued in his Command of the Army, tho his other Places were taken from him, and the the Dutchess was also removed from hers. Thus far they judged they might proceed, sceing the Duke had made sufficient Acquisitions to support his Dignity; so that they

they would neither wholly disoblige his Friends, as the Queen kept him still in his Command, nor disoblige his Enemies, as they lessened his Power, which the latter would look upon as a Prelude to his Fall.

BUT as the Clergy were full of Expectations upon this Change, so the Ministry were no sooner fixed and the Members of the House of Commons chosen, than they made it their business to oblige them; and therefore those Clergymen who fell in with the present Measures were careffed at Court, especially the most active leading Men among them, and the rest who were their Dependants swarm'd about Westminster-Hall, and the Court of Requests, in hopes of Preferment or of better Bénefices. ther would it indeed have been prudent in the Ministry, "to have fallen short on their part, because the Clergy, as they had been very instrumental in this great Change, so they might have foon cauled great Uneafness, had the Ministry disappointed them, or turned remiss in their Promises to them; and therefore they advised the Oucen in the first place to give her Royal Licence for the Convocation to fit to do Business during the present Session of Parliament, which was done in very ample manner. And this was the more acceptable to the Clergy, because in the time of the late Ministry, and in the preceding Reign, they were often prorogu'd, almost almost as soon as they met, which was owing to a leading Majority in the lower House who opposed the Bishops, and this was the Cause of their Prorogation, that no unseasonable Disputes, might arise among the Clergy, while the Nation was at war with so potent an Enemy, which required the greatest Unanimity among all Sorts of People. But the the late Ministry acted very prudently in filencing all unfeatonable Difputes by this wife Precaution, and many of the wifer fort both among the Bishops and inferiour Clergy Were fatisfy'd that this was not done from any bad Intention towards the Church, but to bring some reftless Men of their own Order, to a better Temper, or to lay their Enterprizes at rest; yet as the Generality of the Clergy highly resented this proceeding, so they became the more firmly attached to the new Ministry, as their Patrons, who had afferted their just Rights, which they faid the others invaded; so that they resolved to concur in all things with the Parliament. This was indeed a very great Point the Ministry gain'd upon their first Entrance on the Government, but the next step they took was still of much greater Consequence to them.

don, being very much encreased by reafon of the continual resort that was from all parts of the Kingdom, and from foreign Nations to it, and there being but few Parish-Churches in those parts, many of the Inhabitants could have no place in them. This had been often complain'd of, by many of those call'd Low-Church Men, as well as by the High-Church; but the Nation being unavoidably plung'd into so great debt, over and above the yearly expence of the War, therefore little or no publick Encouragement could be allowed for the building of Churches, and fettling Revenues for the maintenance of Ministers: but to supply this want as much as possible for the present, several Bishops, abundance of Noblemen and Gentlemen, with other Inhabitants, who lived in those Out-parts of London, contributed Sums of Money to build Chapels of Ease, and maintain'd Ministers at their own proper Charge; which however was not sufficient, as the Number of People was continually increasing. The Duty on the Newcastle Coal had been for many years apply'd partly to the building of St. Paul's Cathedral, and partly to the service of the War, and other publick Exigences; so that nothing could be spared hitherto from thence, towards any Undertaking of this kind: but it happen'd that the Works of St. Paul's were now almost finished, and the Court being determin'd to make Peace at any rate; had therefore a design of appropriating that part of the Coal-

Coal-Revenue that went to the building of St. Paul's for the building of new Churches. This had indeed been a very commendable Design, had those who were at the Helm promoted it, purely from a Zeal to Religion, and even as it was, all good Men fell in with the Proposal; especially, fo far as it might not any ways come in competition with the Efforts, that were then absolutely necessary for securing the Religion and Property of the Subjects; for these judged that all Acts and Intentions; however much pretended for the good of Religion, might nevertheless prove fruitless, unless due care should be taken to preferve the Interests of the Nation from being burt by the Infults and Machinations, as well of foreign, as domestick Enemies. And therefore some only distik'd the Motion. so far as it savour'd too much of a design in the Ministry, to make a hasty and precipitant Peace with France, and to ingratiate themselves with the Clergy, and with those who pretended to be the most devoted to the establish'd Church: for besides the unfettled State of the Publick Affairs, the time of these Revenues was not yet expired, nor could for some years be apply d to the building of Churches, or to any on ther uses than those to which they had been appropriated by former Acts of ParliaBUT this was a marter of such great directing them to inquire what Churches were wanting, in, and about London and Westminster. Upon which a Bill was brought in for building 50 new Churches in those Suburbs, and for provision for Ministers to the faid Churches; whereupon Addresses were feat from all places, extolling the Queen's Picty, and the Zeal of her Parliament in their great Concern for the Church, and some of the Clergy represented the want of Churches as a very great Cause of Schilln; (which was a word very much in their mouths at that time,) and gave it as a Reafon why there were so many Differrers from the Establish'd Church; tho when this Affair came into the House of Lords, and the same Argument was made use of by a Reverend Prelate of that Party, fome of the Bishops could not themselves help taking notice of the Partiality of fuch Reasons, observing with great Honesty that this could not be the Cause of so many Distenters, it being very well known, that in those places where 'the' Churches were most wanting, there was also the fewest Meeting-Houses. Bur whatever Views some men might have in this matter, yet is it was

was in it felf a good and necessary Work, it therefore met with no Oppolition, for an Act passed in both Houses for building the said so Churches according to the Tenour of the Bill, which had this immediate Effect, That as the Ministry, and Parliament were on the one hand highly extoll'd, so on the other, their Predecessors were as much run down, as being negligent of the Church; tho there was no Circumstance all the time they were in Power, that could enable them to undertake such a work, no more than it was possible for the New Ministry to go through with it, until the War was brought to a Period, and the building of St. Paul's finish'd.

THE Ministry and Parliament having thus establish'd themselves very much in the good Graces of their Party, by shewing. To favourable a disposition towards the Church and Clergy; they made it their next business to shew their Zeal for the Interests of their Country in its other Concerns; which was the more necessary on their part, that their Agents had traduced those who had been so lately in Power, as much on account of their Deficiency in Civil Matters, as upon the score of Religion, and therefore it behoved them to A great raile a great Noise about Milmanagements, noise about and Corruptions, to impose on the Queen's Mijma-Credulity, and on those who were weak and Corenough, ruptions.

enough, or whose Interest it was to fall in with all their Calumnies.

SEVERAL Mismanagements indeed there were, and Corruptions too; but these happen'd chiefly among inferiour Officers: for when the Ministry were engag'd in such a multiplicity of Affairs, and such as were of the greatest Consequence, it was impossible but some would take the liberty to do unwarrantable things. Every day produc'd fresh Events, that could not be neglected a Moment, wherefore those in Power had not Time, or Opportunity, to examine into all the Miscarriages that might happen in the sevreal Branches of the Revenue. The Parliament had also so much business every Session, that they were forc'd oftentimes to sit a great part of the Summer, and when any Discoveries were made of Frauds, the Persons concern'd in them, were generally turn'd out, and profecuted: so that there was little reason to find fault upon any such account. But it was impossible for the New Ministry to keep up their Reputation, without fome publick Scrutiny, after so great a Noise had been made about Corruptions and Abuses. This Scrutiny was also judg'd necessary upon account of the Publick Credit, thinking thereby to gain over some of the Money'd Men, by shewing how precarious their Fortunes and Estates in the Publick were,

were, under the Conduct and Management of Mon, whom they had given out with the greatest assurance to be of loose and, diffolute Principles, and had studied nothing; but their own private Interest. And, Mr. Harley, the chief Instrument in all this, was in hopes they would make some notable Discoveries, being led into it by some busy Sycophants, who were officious to get into his Favour, by pretending many Abuses; which they could not prove, as appeared afterwards; and likewife by his own want of Acquaincance with the manner of applying the Revenue, and how it should be accounted, for, which made him; and those he consulted with, imagine all things had been milmanaged sif not confounded. The Ministry recommended this Affair to the House of Commons, and the House, after a general Enquiry into the State of the Nation, having appointedi Commissioners as usual to state and examine the Publick Accounts, gave them very An Enquipositive Instructions to inquire into the man-state of the ner of raising the Money, and to what Pur-Revenue. posses it had been employ'd during the

However the Commissioners laid before the House all such plain Abuses as they could discover, and further represented that the publick. Accounts had not passed their several Offices for the space of five Years or upwards, whereby they alledged several Millions of Money were unaccounted for: That the Collectors of the Land-Tex had been negligent, in not returning the publick Money into the Exchequer: That the Offisers of the Treasury had also been wanting in their Duty, in not calling those Rersons to account. lice. For several of those who were concerned in the Revenue during the late Administration, being Men of good Interest, who fill kept their Seats in Parliament, took this matter fully to task, answering to the several particulars thereof. And first as to the many Millions faid to be unaccounted for, they took notice that all the Accounts were ready in their several Offices, and it was owing chiefly to the vaft Burden of Affairs, that lay upon the Ministry and Parliament, that they had not been called for; fo that it could not be faid with any reason, that so many Millions were unaccounted for, fince the passing them was only matter of form, and was all that remain'd to be done. As for the Negligence of Gollectors, it was answered, there were but few Instances of that kind to be met with, and that it was impossible but some such Neglects would happen, where the Revenues were for much increas'de as they had been during the War, and that they could make it appearall reasonable Endeavours had been used; to bring them to account. As for the other thatters mentioned in this Report, they took notice, That in regard of the Uncertainty of the yearly Expense of the War, and by reason of feveral unforeseen: Accidents, il divers Sums had been raised upon the Creent of the Ministry, which the next Selfion of Parliament generally made good, which could could not be avoided without a manifest Hazard to the common Cause, and rendering the War in many respects ineffectual, That it also became necessary sometimes, to apply several Sums of Money for carrying on different Services, from those for which the faid Sums had been appointed by Parliament, as in defect of the Men who were defigned for the Service of Spain; the overplus Money was converted to other uses of the War. But the the State of the War had rendered these things unavoidable, and tho all these Sums were placed in proper Accounts plainly to be seen, yet the House of Commons voted, "The alienating any "Sum or Sums" of Money to any other " use, besides that expressed in the Acts of " Parliament, by which fuch Sums were " granted, to be a Milapplication of the " publick Money." " And that the raist fing any Sums without the Consent of Parliament was a great cause of the na-"tional Debts."

UPON this a Representation of the A frange State of the Nation was drawn up in the Representation of the Whole House, and presented the House to the Queen, wherein mention was made of Comin general of many Abuses committed by the Consent of the late Ministry, with no other view but to give Confirmation to all the standalous Reports that had been raised against them, being suited exactly to the present

A.T the same time, the lower House of Convocation appointed a Committee, who with the Concurrence of some of the Bishops should draw up, a Representation of A Reprethe State of Religion, to be also presented fentation of to the Queen. For the leading Men among House of the Clergy, especially those who sought Convocation.

A street Honour and Preferment, were zear lous to, go hand in hand with the new Ministry, and to strengthen the Hopse of Commons in all their hor Proceedings, Among others, Dr. Atterbury, had a deep share in this Business, and led most of the Clergy by his presended Zeal for their Interests. This Representation was very long; and contain'd a great deal, conferning the Atheism and Irreligion of the Times, which they aferib'd chiefly ito the late Growth of Herafy, and Schifm, and by the gripps ing of wicked and arheiftical Books, which tended to, promete many dangerous Opinions, the Fault being laid chiefly on those who had been lately in Power. But this Representation of the Clergy was never presented. For several Members of the same House, and even some who were of the Committee found great fault with it, while it was under Deliberation; and when it was brought up to the Bishaps for their Concurrence, rence, none of them objected against such a Representation, had it been done purely with an honest Zeal, that Judges and Magistrates might have the Royal Injunction to put 'a stop to Irreligion and Profancies, so the Bishops far as Came Within their Cognizance; they oblerved there was too much of delign to be feen in this Representation, and some to show of the Bishops complain'd both of the Matnoi: ter and Manner of it. The Style being too florid for 4 Subject of fuch serious Consideration? And as to the Matter, they took notice, that it contain'd feveral things which came only within the Gognizance of the Civil Power, and that there were also feveral Expressions of too much Zeal and Warmill, which seemed to be applyed to the late! Ministry, whereunto they could not agree," feeing it did by no means become Miniffers of the Gospel? while they complain'd of Vice and Immorality; to apply any thing directly or indirectly to particular Persons, before there was some Proof brought against them, as that must be the means, only to inflame those Jealousses which were already too much riveted in the Minds of the common People; and which is the end might be found to be ill-grounded? The Bishops also took notice; that the lower House had omitted to mention the Protestant Succession in the House of Hanover, which they judged a necessary Duryin all their publick Address is and Representations to the Queen. And herefore the Bishops reduced it to a much horter Compais, and return'd it to the ower House. But those who bore the chief way among the Inferiour Clergy, were very efractory upon this occasion, as they had been it other times in oppoling the Bilhops. For hese drew up a new Representation, but ltogether upon their first Model, wherein hey indeed supplied their own Defect in pentioning the Protestant Succession in this. which they had omitted in the other, and changed some Words and Phrases for others hat were more decent; but they could not ibate any thing of their Zeal against the late Ministry, and therefore the Bishops refuled to join with them, so that the Convocation broke up without doing any Business.

BUT tho the Ministry were not a little disappointed by the Opposition the Bishops made to this Representation, yet their Friends in the House of Commons carried a very great Sway, and the Lords notwithstanding they acted with more Temper, yet the Majority in that House seem'd also to savour the new Measures; nor was this much to be wondered at, considering the indefatigable pains many were at, to hand about Lyes and Calumnies; and with what Considence and Assurance they were afferted as Truths. The Lords had taken the Assairs

had been in a bad way for two Years or upwards, after the Battle of Almanza; and were not yet fully recovered, notwithstanding the great Expence the Nation had been at in that part of the Service: and therefore they called in the Generals who had commanded in Spain, to enquire into their Conduct, where a Rivalship was made between two Men, who both merited very well of the Nation, viz. the Earl of Peterborough, and the Earl of Gallway. The first was very successful and behaved with great Bravery in the taking of Barcelona, and in fome other Enterprizes; whereas the other being defeated at Almanza, this, according to the common way of judging, caused his Conduct to be very much suspected; and the more so, that the Lord Peterborough had given it as his Opinion when in Spain, that it would be most for the good of the common Cause, to carry on a defensive War there. Whereas Gallway, the Lord Tyrawly and General Stanhope, agreed in their Sentiments with the Duke of Marlborough, and the rest of the late Ministry, who looked upon the Conquest of Spain to be easy, because most of the Fortresses in it were but weak, and the Spaniards inclinable to fall in with the conquering side, and that a defensive War would entail a growing Expence upon the Nation. And therefore in the Year 1706, when when Philip was driven quite out of Spain, and that Kingdom almost conquered, orders were given to the Lord Gallway and the other Generals, to improve these Advantages, by making as freedy a Conquest as posfible of that whole Kingdom, that the Seat of the War might be confin'd wholly to the Netherlands, where the greatest and most powerful Efforts were required, which they judged the likeliest means to bring the War to a speedy Period. In all which the Lord Gallway acted in concert with the then Ministry, and according to his Orders. And tho the Loss at Almanza was in a great measure owing to the Disappointments he met with, by the nor coming of the Portugueze in time, and by the Dilatoriness of the Forces which were at Barcelona with King Charles, whereby he was exposed to fight at a great disadvantage; nevertheless no Allowance could be made for him. The Lords who sided with the Court in this Affair, made it a handle to strike at the Duke of Marlborough and the rest of that Ministry, and being back'd by many who had not confidered the Affair very much, they procured the Thanks of the House to be given to the Earl of Peterborough, without allowing the other Generals a full hearing. However, several Lords protested against this proceeding, nor only because they perceived it to be levelled at the late Ministry, but as they also looked upon it to bear very hard on the Homour of the other Generals, who had all signalized themselves for the Nation, especially the Earl of Gallway, who had not only received several Wounds at that fatal Battle, but had lost his right Arm at the Siege of Badajos, and had behaved with great Fidelity and Integrity in every Station.

a great loss how to support the publick Credit, and to raise the necessary Supplies; for while they thus succeeded so far in both Houses, as to gratify their own Party, they were still losing ground in the Estimation of such Persons, whose Estates lay chiefly in the publick Funds, some of whom had drawn out their Money, and others being in great doubt whether they should run any further Risque, unless the new Ministry were resolved to prosecute the War until a safe Peace could be obtain'd. And therefore the Ministry were forced to fall upon several weak Artisices to keep up the publick Artifices to Credit, and among others, that Mr. Harley Support the was preparing a great Project, that would publick pay the Debts of the Nation, which filled all Men with Expectations, for his Friends had given him out as a very profound Manin Business.

IN the mean while a Fund of seven Millions Sterling was voted for the Service of the Year, and the Commons were obliged to lay Duties on Leather, Soap, Candles, and other Necessaries; which hitherto had been spared, being such things as fall the mon heavy upon the Poor. This was to be raised, as the other Funds had been before, by way of Lottery; and that the money d Men might be encouraged to subscribe, the Duke of Maribbrough was defit'd to make what hafte he could to the Army, and all the recessary Preparations were made with thongfual Dispatch, tho the wiscr forcfaw plainly that the War would not be contimed, and there were many just reasons to appearend an unfeafonable stop would be put stoid for belides the finking of "the national Cridit, which must disable the Ministry from carrying on the War, it was observed that the French, who for several Years before thad been folliciting all the Allies for Peace, by the Ministers of neutral Princes, were now grown very quiet. They had alipe by railing many new Recruits, brought amore numerous Army into the Field than they had done fince the War began, and to maintain this great Armament had raised à Tax on all Ranks, from the highest to the lowest, upon a positive Assurance, that the War would speedily be brought to a Conclusion. : The Command was again committed Willers, who fortify'd himself so as to prevent the Allies from making any further Progress in the French Territories, having covered covered his whole Front with the Schurge, and having Arras on the Geotte, besidesall that Art could do further to sender it impracficable for the Confederates to attack his Army. THE S.E. Things, gave ground to believe the French were in great hopes, and expectations of a happy Turn in their Affairs; having taken encouragements from the igheat Changes in England, and this boing in amain-ner the last Push, had the store made phonfelves to fecure within their Lines, that the Duke of Martharough, could fearer do any thing to annow them for a great part in the freih opportunity to asperfe the Duke, as if he delign'd no Affairs should succeed undenthis new Administration : 10, that who Duke and Durchele were compared to Ast heary and Fulvid, infinuating from thense as isome Duke had a mind to let his Laurels wither, and to facrifice the Publick to his own private Humour or Interest, the be made the contrary appear before the Campaign was ended, as will be thewn apon.

IN the mean while, the great Project for paying the Publick Debts, which had The South-been much talk d of ever fince Harley came ScaProjed into Power, was communicated to the House of Commons: whereby was propofed to give Parliamentary Security, for all fuch Sums, as were due for supplying the Navy with Stores and Provisions, for which no Publick Security had as yet been given, and to creft these Bills into a Capistal Stock, for carrying on a Trade to the South Seas. This indeed somewhat adwanged the value of the Victualling and Navy Bills: but was of no fignification to raise the Publick Credit, begause the sucgood State of Affairs: particularly on obtaining good Terms of Peace, from France and Spains whereof there was at this time no great likelihood, as things wore anamaged; fo that it was generally contemned by the Money'd Men. As for the Project itself, the fiest rise of it, was from a Scheme given in to Harley some Years before, by Dr. Paul Cham-Infoffinge. berlayne, a Man well known for his skill in Man-Midwifery, and who it feems had, made a voyage to the West-Indies in his younger Days. His Proposal was, that a Conquest should be made of some part of South Amenica, and Colonies settled there, as in Jamaica, and the other English Plantations, which Mr. Harley at that time foom'd to neglect as an idle Dream. But perhaps he might take fome Hints from it, for when he was out of all Employment, he was observed often to find fault with the Management of the War, and it was the usual Topick of his Friends fairs, that the only way to bring the War to a right Issue, and to weaken the Power of The Senti-France and Spain, would be by sending a timents of strong 'Armament to make Conquests in street Mini-the Spanish West-Indies; that being the erning the main Source from whence the French War.

War.

King drew his Supplies. Some Overtures of this kind were also made to the then Ministry by other hands, but they looked upon all such Projects to be both expensive and impracticable, and such as might expose the common Cause to the greatest Hazards; and therefore they always continued firmly in this Resolution, that there was no other way so feasible to reduce the Power of France, as by taking their strongest Towns in the Netherlands, which guarded their Frontiers.

BUT Mr. Harley, and the other Leading Men of that Party, were so full of themselves, that notwithstanding the many Reasons had been given against such hazardous Expeditions, while the Nation was unavoidably engaged in a Land Wars yet they would venture to undertake something of this kind, now that the Power was in their own hands. So much had been said against Expeditions to the Spanish West-Indies, that they would not pretend to send any Armament thither: but sitted out a strong Squadron of Ships of War, with a good number number of Transports, having several Regiments on board, to annoy the French Plantations in North America, especially to take possession of some of their Forts in 4n Expe-Canada; where the French carry on a ve-dition to ty great Fishing Trade. And they were in hopes, by this Means, nor only to raise the Credit of their new erected Company; but if they should fuckeed, that it would enable them to treat with France upon their own ; bottom, fo as to obtain good Terms, which, they were sensible: was their Interest; and, indeed it was only thro their Weakness and Insufficiency, and the wrong Foundation upon which they establish'd their Power, that they were led into all their Miscarriages. As for this Expedition, it was strangely undertaken, and as strangely manag'd; for A tho the House of Commons had, this same Session, resolv'd in opposition to the late Ministry, ... That to inlarge the Service, or " increase the Charge beyond the Bounds " prescrib'd by Act of Parliament, was il-" legal, and an Invasion of the Rights of "that House." Yet this Expedition, tho a very expensive one, was undertaken without making an Estimate of the Charge, notwithstanding the Parliament was then fitting. . And that all things might be carried on with the greater Secrecy, the Fleet was victualled much short of what was necessaly fore fuch an Enterprize, with a defign. that that they should take in fresh Supplies at New-England, and that no Umbrage might be given to France, they sorbore giving Directions beforehand to the Governour of New-England, or to any of the neighbouring Provinces; which caused so much Delay, that when the Squadron arriv'd towards Canada, it was so late in the Year, that they could not go up the River's which in Winter is very boisterous) by reason of many contrary Currents, and the Provisions they could be furnish'd with, in: New-England, for want of previous Notice, sell much short of what was necssary for such an Expedition. Their Ships were also: abundantly too large; insomuch that they could have done nothing to the purpose, had every thing else been rightly managed; so that they were forc'd to return home with the loss of eight of their Transports; and most of the Men in them, who were cast away in that dangerous River.

BUT the Duke of Marlborough had better success in the Netherlands, and made it appear to all the World, that his Zeal for the Honour of his Country, and the common Cause, was not to be shaken by any disregard shewn to his Person, and Services; this Campaign having proved no less glorious than those, for which he had been so deservedly renown'd over all Europe. For the Court of France, in hopes of a sudden den Turit of Affairs, as has been taken notice, had made fuch preparations as enabled that with great Presumption, he term'd them the Neptus ustra of the Confederates; infinialing thereby, that the Confederates could extend their Conquelts no further; sid he was the more confident and secure, that he found the Duke of Marlborough did not offer to attempt any thing for a great past of the Summer, wherefore he form a Pichighi of invading Brabant, which be-filles the Prospect he had of making himself Malter of forme part of that Country, it would oblige the Confederate Army to reflect to cover Brussels, and prevent them ablointely from advancing towards his Lines. But the greater the difficulty was of attack-ing the French, the more glorious it prov'd The D of to the Duke, who knew perfectly well Marlbolow to improve every opportunity. The great fuc. Duke had before this form d'a design of en-ces. tring those Lines, and this Movement of the French Army gave him room to pur it in execution; who observing carefully all the Motions of the French, and what their design was, advanc'd between Arras and Hedin, as if he meant in earnest to attack them; which so much alarmed Villars, that he drew his whole Army to the right of Arras, put Troops into Hedin, repair d all Breaches, mounted Cannon where they were most necessary, and in fine did every thing to render the attacking his Lines impracticable. The Duke on the other hand improv'd this Alarm, by performing all the usual Formalities, with so much Conduct, and Secrecy, that the Generals of the Confederate Army did not so much as imagine he had any other view, than to attack the faid Lines next Morning. This so amus'd the French General, that he kept his Men under Arms night and day, and drew all the strength he could possibly to that side: by which he very much expos'd the Posts on the Senset, which were left in agreat measure unguarded. The Duke had in the mean while ordered some supernumerary Troops to be posted at Liste, Tournay, and the neighbouring Garrisons; with a View to execute his present Design of forcing the Enemies Lines. These Troops met at Pont la Rach, at a certain hour, according to the Duke's Orders, and were join'd with the Garrison of Doway, that had been reinforc'd with ten good Battalions, which with four Battalions, that were sent from the Army, as an Escorte to the heavy Baggage, made together a Body of 23 Battalions, and 17 Squadrons.

IN the mean time, the Army was expecting Orders to march; but the Orders were not given out till fix in the Evening. They began, as soon as it was dark enough, enoughaito : without being feen of the Enemy, and the whole Army, when they expected to march to the right, were under the greatest Surprize to find themselves guided to the left. The Duke himself hasted before the rest of the Army, with 50 Squadrons, to fultain the Troops, of Doway, and those sent from the other: Garrisons; and about 5 next morning he passed the Schurpe at Vitri, where' he got Intelligence, that the other Troops had paffed the Senset at Arleux without Opposition, and were repairing the Bridges the French had broke down, when they withdrew from that Place. The Duke upon this press'd forward his March, and about 10. at. Night, he also passed the Senfet at Anleux with a considerable part of his Troops; and because the French had by this time got Intelligence of his March, he formed thase who were with him into a Line to receive the Enemy, whom he discover'd early the next morning upon their march nowards him. But Villars fearing to engage, posted a hundred Men in Oist, a small Garrison, and retired with the rest, thro' the Defile of Marquion, where he. encamped with a Morass and Rivulet before him. The Main Body of the Confe-a derace Army were all this while upon their march, and the Weather being very favousablo, they encompass'd eleven Leagues with-Out out; making a halt; and having also passed the: Schurpe and Sanfer, they became Masters of the Rrench Lines without striking, a Blow, tho in their March they went thrown incredible number of Rivers, Defiles, and difficult Passes.

THE Confederates having thus got with in the Enemies Lines, in obliged Villars to retire towards Cambray, where the Duke could not attack him with faffety senot only because of the great Fatigue the Aimy had undergone already in their extravidinary Marches, but the French were now to covered with Morasses and Villages, that while the Confederates flouid endeavour to attack them in that Situation; they mich! lose the Opportunity of passing the Schelde, and of putting another delign in execution, which the Duke had formed against Bouchain. The French wied all manner of Stratagems to disappoint the Duke in this Enterprize, which was the more difficult, that the Weather happened now to be wet; but the Gonfederates having feamed two Bridges which the French had made ready to their hands, passed the Scholde in spite of opposition, and encamped at Ivy, where their Bread-Waggons and heavy Baggage arrived safe, notwithstanding the Enemy fet many Stratagents on foot to surprize them. Nevertheless the French Army was to numerous and to well provided thaville

Duke of Marlhogengh could not prevent Villars from puring some Troops and Ne... cessaries into Bouchain. The French also endeavoured to possels themselves of Ivy, which covered the right Wing of the Confederate Army. But the Duke caused several Redoubts to be made in face of the Enemy, which joined the Line whereby the right Wing was secured, and a Way made towards the Town. The Enemy had carried their Entrenchments so far, that it was judgedialmost impossible to invest the Town, and had begun a Communication between their Entrenchments and the Town, which would have prevented the Siege altogether had the Duke followed the ordinary Me-, thods usual in such cases. For Villars had raised Fortifications on both sides, which obliged the Duke to begin his Lines in the middles which was the more hazardous, because the Men were forced to work between two great Fires of the Enemies Cannon from both sides, having no advantage excepting, that a rising Ground covered them from the Town, and that the Shot from the Enemics, Trenches but just reached them. Neither was this the only Difficulty the Confederates met with. For the French also began three Redoubts between Waurechin and the Town, but the Duke- of Marlborough coming in person with a Body of chosen Men, forced them to desist. The French tried afterwards wards to make a new Communication between the two Rivers, and a Morass where they were covered with Willows and Rushes, which hid their Workmen; who with Fascines had made a Parapet from Tree to Tree quite to the Town, and had made a little Post in a narrow Way call'd the Cowway, which feads thro this Morals about 200 Paces in Length, and 1000 from the Town, guarded by four Companies of Grenadiers, and fultained by the Regiment du Roy. But a Body of the Confederate Army passed the Senset and Schelde, over Bridges of Fascines in spite of the Enemy, who did all they could to prevent them, and the Duke ordered a Detachment of 400 Grenadiers our of this Body to dislodge the French; who having a Crown a Man given to encourage them, waded above four or five hundred Paces up to their middle in the Morass, which the Enemy had laid under Water; and the French finding the Water not sufficient to prevent their Approach, gave them one sharp Fire, and deserted these Post. The French after this did all they could to disturb the Confederate Convoys; but these being well guarded, and not taking the direct way from Doway, but being covered by the Scharpe, and also by a Line the Duke caused to be made for their Security, by that means arrived fafe without molestation.

MANY other Enterprizes were set on foot to disturb the Besiegers; for Villars kept his Army in continual Motion, tho to no purpose. He attacked the Post at Hordam, of which the Confederates had taken possesfion. He also ordered a Body of 10000 Men to pals the Senset to surprize Doway, but was disappointed; so that the Duke opened his Trenches, and after a few days made two wide Breaches, took possession of several Posts, and got all things ready for a general Storm: which the Besieged perceiving, offered to capitulate, but were for that time refused, because they infilted upon too high Terms. Neverthelels the whole Gattison, Takes Bou-consisting of 2717, private Men, besides Of-chain. ficers, were forced in a few days to lurrender Prisoners of War, in light of the Whole French

THIS was the last Service the Duke ever performed in the Field, and there was all the reason in the world to believe it would have given a finishing Stroke to the Hopes and Expectations of the French King, and brought the War to an honourable and safe liste, had the Duke been intrusted with the Management of the Peace. But his eminent Services were every day more and more abused by his ungrateful Countrymen. The Ministry had made an Experiment of what they were able to do in the Expedition they had set on soot this Year to Cunada, and probably if this had met with Success, it might have encouraged them to go upon some other Enterprize of the same kind; and had they been thereby enabled to treat with France upon any tolerable footing, they would not have been wantilig to have afcrib'd any Advantages the Nation might have gain'd, to their own good Conduct, in managing the War to better Purpose, and more to the Interest of the Nation, than the late Ministry had done? but finding themfelves disappointed, they had recourse to new Shifts. This Campaign brought great Glory to the Duke of Marthorough, while the Ministry were mortified will their own ill Succels, and were forced to make many Excules for the Milcarriage of their late Expedition, which had this effect, to render them the more impatient to have the Duke removed from his Command of the Army; and to drive them on to a precipitate Peace. For it was impossible for them to continue the War upon the Jame footing the late Ministry had done had done, after they had exclaim'd so much against their Measures, and had ascrib'd the great Burden of Debt the Nation was fallen into, and the want of Trade to their Avarice and other ill Deligns, in protracting effe War. And therefore they began underhand to deal with French Emissaires, in order to a

THIS same Year, in April, the Empe-The Empetor Juseph died at Vienna, which changed Death. the Face of Affairs very much, and proved favourable to this Design of our new Minifty. That Prince being without Male Issue, his Brother Charles, who was then in Spain, fer up for the Imperial Dignity; which for several Successions had been contimed in the House of Austria, by reason of their Power and Interest in the Empire; nor could lit! Well miscarry at this time, because he hid the Friendship of all the other Allies.

And the Ministry here in England, being settlible how much his Succession might remove the great Difficulties that must have happened about the Crown of Spain, they therefore put the Queen upon using her whole interest to get him elected; and Mr. Cruzes, who had been fornetime Resident in Spails of was ordered to affure him of the Queen's hearty Inclinations to promote his Interest among the Electors; so that all things concurring together, he was on the 12" of Ottober following, chosen Emperor without much Outposition. much Opposition.

AFTER this, the Ministry resolved to make a Push at the Duke of Marsborouga, for as their Views were now altogether to enter upon Negotiations of Peace, so it behoved them to have one placed at the head of the Army, who should act conformably to their Measures: and therefore as their

Agents

Agents had begun with personal Calumny, and had by that means daily encrealed the number of the Duke's Enemies, 19, 1 was absolutely necessary, in order, to confirm all the falle Reports that were spread concerning him, also to advance certain Falis against him; being sensible that whatever had been suggested by private Hands, would not answer their End effectually without a publick Reprehension. And therefore the Commissioners of Accounts, who had their, Instructions from the Ministry, made Information tion made against the Duke, to the House of Commons, against the Dof Marl That upon the Deposition of Sir Safamon borough. Medina, a Jew, who had been employed to supply the Army with Provisions, and upon the Deposition of Mr Cardonel the Duke's Secretary, they could prove that the Duke had taken great Sums of Money on account of the Contracts, for Jupplying Bread and Bread-Waggons to the Forces in the Low Countries. This Report was made towards the latter End of the Year, before the Duke return d from the Army; who no looner heard of it, but he sent a Letter to the Commissioners, himself being at the Haque: wherein he not only owned the Money he had received upon these Contracts, but acquainted them also of another Perquisite he had received, of two and a half per Cent. deducted out of the Pay of the Foreign Troops, in the Service of Great Britain. The Duke made made it appear that the first was a Perquisite which had always been granted to the Commander in Chief, in the Low Countries, for procuring Intelligence, and for other fecret Services. That the Parliament had also allowed 10000 l. per Ann. to be applied to the same Use in the preceeding Reign, which was continued: but K. William finding this Money not near sufficient to answer so great an Expence, chose rather than to demand more Money of the Parliament, that the Duke when he went Plenipotentiary to Holland, in the beginning of the War, should propose the abovemention'd Deduction, to be made out of the Pay of the Foreign Troops, which they all willingly consented to: and that this was, after the King's death, confirm'd by the Queen's Warrant to him, as Commander in Chief, whereof he fent a Copy to the Commissioners. In the fame Letter he acquainted them, that this Money had been truly and honeftly bestowed on that part of the Service for which it was given, and that next to the Bleffing of God, and the Valour of the Confederate Troops, had contributed to the great success that fo constantly attended the Allies in the Netherlands.

BUT this Scrutiny was so far from answering what the Court Party proposed by it, that it rather did the Duke good Service among unprejudiced Persons; who were sensible how much the Success of an Army depends upon Intelligence, and how expensive that branch of the Service was, against so powerful an Enemy, who brought fuch vast Armies into the Field; but especially as the French had usually several Enterprizes on foot at once, andwere no fooner disappointed in one, than another was ready to be put in execution, which rendered it absolutely necessary for the Duke to be very watchful, and to employ Money without measure, to get intelligence of their Designs. And therefore it was natural to think, the refult of this Scrutiny should have been to return the Duke Thanks for imploying that Money so much to the advantage of the Common Cause; but instead of that, when the Parliament sook this Affair into their Consideration, which was about the beginning of the Year next ensuing, they voted the two and half per Cent. publick Money, tho it was a voluntary and allowed Deduction made by the foreign Troops themselves, and upon this ordered the Duke to be prosecuted.

ABOUT the same time, the Queen removed him from his Command of the Army, as a person who had fallen under her Displeasure, and appointed the Duke of Ormond to succeed him as Captain General: which gave no small uneasiness to those at home, who were the most interested in the Welfare of their Country, and to all the Allies abroal, who concluded from this extraordinary step in the Queen, that her Ministers design'd to keep in no good Terms with them, but would rather abandon their Interests: than change their Measures and therefore the Ministers of those States, whose Troops were in the English Pay, had Orders. from their Principals to lay claim to that Money, as Part of the Pay of their Troops; and to declare, That they had voluntarily consented to this Deduction for the good of the Common Cause, and were willing to give the same Allowance to the Duke of Ormond, He tivinwhich the Duke of Ormand this same Year dicated by accepted of, and would not go over to the the Allies. Army until he had the Queen's Warrant for receiving this, and the other Perquifites, which had been allow'd to the Duke of Marladsough.

THESE things tended greatly to vindicate the Duke of Marlborough against the Malice of his Adversaries, who did all that was in their power to find some Handle against him, but could not; for the Duke alfo, upon his return to England, clear'd himfelf very fully, in a Speech which he delign d to have made in the House of Commons. But when he was going to ask their leave to pronounce it; in the hearing of all the Members, was prevented by some of his Friends. who thought it might prove a bad Precedent, and advised him only to have it printed, which accordingly was done. In this he gave an Account of all his Transactions, so K 2 far as related to the discharge of the Considence and Trust, that had been repos'd in him, as Commander in chief of the Army: wherein it appear'd he had acquitted himself with so much Faith and Integrity, that the Court was forc'd to let drop all Proceedings against him.

BUT this did not any ways move the Commissioners, who were still in hopes to find somewhat against the Lord Treasurer Godolphin; but to no essent, for that Lord had passed all his Accounts, so that there remained but some sew Matters unsinished, which was owing to his sudden and unexpected Removal, and were soon after clear'd: for he was cautious, even to a degree of seasilines, and was so punctual in the discharge of his Office, that nothing material could be objected against him. So that this whole Enquiry ended in a noise of great Frauds and Mismanagements, without bringing any other to light than those that have been already mentioned; which were such as did not affect while these things were transacting, our Ministers were at the same time contriving all possible Methods to bring on the Peace with France, to which all these Scrutinies were a Presude, that under the notion of Publick Abuses, people might grow the more impatient at the Continuance of the War. And things were already so far advanced towards Peace, that a Congress was appointed; of which we shall take some notice before we proceed to other Affairs. The Queen had, about the latter end of the Year, lignified her Inclinations to all the Alties, of purting an end to the effusion of Blood, which the complain'd of, as a thing very disagreeable to her, and wish'd they would concur with her in accomplishing so desirable a work; to which they consented, tho with some Reluctancy, because it was rumour'd abroad, that the Queen's Ministers had for some time held a secret Correspondence with France, and Mr. Prior, a man well known by his Poems, formerly Secretary at the Treaty of Reswick, was sent over privately into that Kingdom, which gave no small Umbrage to many, both at home and abroad, who by this extraordinary step in the Ministry, were afraid of some underhand Practices. Nevertheless most People were desirous of Peace; and the rather, that Charles, whom the Confederates had design'd for the Crown of Spain, was now advanced to the Imperial Dignity; so that without much difficulty the above-mention'd Congress was agreed to begin at Utrecht the The Confirst Day of the New Year 1712; and in order gress at thereunto, the Queen sent Letters to all the Allies, that they might dispatch Ministers to that Place.

THE Queen's Plenipotentiaries were the Lord Raby and Dr. Robinson; the first was created Earl of Strafford, having been sent over some time before as Plenipotentiary to the States-General, in the room of the Lord Viscount Townshend. The other had been some time Resident at the Court of Sweden, where he went first of all Chaplain to a publick Minister, and upon this change came into much Favour at Court, being made Bishop of Bristol and Dean of Windsor, and probably had this Confidence repos'd in him to oblige the Clergy, many of whom expected that the highest Honours and Preferments in the State, should now be conferr'd upon Persons of their Order. Besides that this Bishop having resided in Sweden might have imbib'd some of the Maxims of that Court, which were opposite to the Interest of the Confederates, and therefore might render him the more fit to be employ'd in this grand Negociation: but be that as it will, he fet out with the good liking of all the High-flown Party, who look'd upon this Choice in the Queen to presage all manner of Felicity, both to Church and State.

THE Queen also at the meeting of the Parliament express d herself very well with respect to the Negociations then in view:

Speech at the opening of the Par- cc liament.

"That the best Means to obtain a good Peace, was to make early Preparations for War, and promised likewise, that she would be careful of the Interests of all her Allies, and would unite with them in the strictest

Beclaration, she also gave the same Assurances to the States-General, before the opening of the Congress, which she confirm'd in a Message to the Parliament the 17th of January, when she proposed to join with them in a strict Union, in order to obtain a good Peace, and to guaranty and support the same.

THE Dutch, upon the Assurances the Queen gave them, sent their Ministers very soon to the Congress, tho they were not without much Jealousy of the Court of Great Britain, which made them appoint Deputies for every Province, who arrived at Utrecht before the French Ministers; but the Ministers of the other Allies came slowly; and the Court of Vienna gave in several Remonstrances to the Dutch, against entering upon any Negociations with France, until that Monarch should consent to give up Spain to the House of Austria.

THE new Emperor also dispatch'd Prince Prince Eu-Eugene over into England, upon the same gene comes Errand, and to concert proper Measures for England. the Recovery of Spain; and for that End he proposed in the Emperor's Name, not His busionly to send a considerable Body of Menness. from Germany into that Kingdom, but to contribute a: 4th part of the whole Expence, which was much more than his Brother the late Emperor had done. Mr. Harley was now created Earl Oxford and Mortimer. He was also made a Knight of the Garter, and Lord High Treasurer; so that Prince Engene was obliged to make his Addresses to him, as Prime Minister, who in appearance treated him with great Civility, as did also the two Secretaries of State, and having fevetal times Access to the Queen, she also seem'd to express a more than ordinary Regard for him; but as to his Affair, he had only fomedark and ambiguous Answers, and at last the Great Men put it off from themfelves upon the House of Commons, which caused Prince Eugene to stay longer here than was acceptable to the Court Party. He had his Apartments all the while he was at London in Leicester-House, where besides the Ministers of State who came only as Spies, the great Men of the opposite Party visited him often, and had many long Conferences with him. He was also entertain'd fumptuously by many of the Nobility at their Houses, and had an uncommon Deference paid him by the People, who flocked from all Parts to fee him: so that no Man was ever treated more honourably, in all respects except in the Business he came about, for the House of Commons postponed his Affair so long, that he was forced to return home without any Answer.

But returns without a-without and NOW the Ministry were so far from regarding any Proposals for continuing the War, that on the contrary, their Agents in the House of Commons were using all possible Endeavours to break off the Engagements the Queen had entered into with her Allies, it being impossible for the Ministry to consult their Interests without disobliging many of their own Friends, who were openly in the Interests of France and the Pretender, and without contradicting their own Reports and Surmifes of the Allies; which, altho they were not without some Colour of Truth, yet were not only very unscasonable, but for the most part ill-grounded, being raised for no other end, but to give sufficient Countenance to the Delign of a separate Peace, in case the Allies should dislike the Terms that might be offered to them. And tho this was indeed strengthening the hands of the common Enemy, yet the House of Commons were to obsequious to the Ministry, that they appointed a Committee to enquire into all Treaties, that sublisted between the Queen and her Allies, wherein their chief Design was to cavil and find fault, as appeared by their Proceedings.

THE Barrier Treaty was the first that was brought upon the Stage. This Treaty The Honse was concerted with the States-General above of Comtwo Years before, viz. in 1709, when the fault with Conferences were held at the Hague, in the Barrorder to a general Peace. For after these rier Treat Conferences broke up, that the Duke of Marlborough went to the Army, the Lord

Viscount Townsbend was ordered to continue with the Ministers of the States-General to finish this Treaty, that a Foundation of Security might be laid for both Nations, which was done with an Eye to the Peace which they expected, by all Circumstances, to be then near at hand. The particular Design of it, was to secure the Protestant Succesfion in the House of Hanover, whereof the States-General became Guarantees, and were under Engagements to affist Great Britain with all their Power, to promote the said Succession. And on the other hand, the Towns and Countries in the Spanish Notherlands, which had been taken from the Enemy during the War, were to be left in their hands as a Security to their State, and to become their Barrier, under fuch Refirictions, as were judged consistent with the Safety of the British Commerce, which was provided for upon the Foundation of former Treaties with the Grown of Spain, until a new Treaty should be concerted with Charles the present Emperor, whom they design'd for that Crown, (his Brother Foseph being than alive,) and who was to have the chief Property in the said Netherlands, upon his reimburfing the Money which had been expended in maintaining the Garrisons and other new Conquests in those Parts. But the nothing could be better concerted for the Honour and Interest of this Nation, than than this Treaty; yet the House of Commons voted fome of the Articles thereof, destructive to the Trade of Great Britain, and highly dishonourable to the Queen; pretending that the Dutch, by having possession. of the abovementioned Conquests, would be able to intercept the free Communication of her Majesty's Subjects, with the Towns and Provinces of the Netherlands. And therefore they also voted the Lord Townshend, who was the publick Minister in this Treaty, an Enemy to his Country. reason of this extraordinary Proceeding, frems to have been partly to please those who. were disaffected to the Protestant Succession. which was so well secured by it; and partly because the Ministry were sensible that it was not in their power to make Peace without restoring to France, several of the Towns: which at that time were in possession of the Troops of Great Britain and the States-General.

THE SE Resolves were also laid before the Queen in a long Representation, with many other Abuses and Connivances, which A strange they said had been between her Majesty's late Representing the faith and her Allies; particularly that sational ministers and her Allies; particularly that sational the Persons whom she had of late intrusted late Minimistry the Management of her Assairs, had stry and the been so far from consulting her Majesty's true Interest and the Interest of their Country, that on the contrary they had, to serve their their own private Ends, permitted the War to be carried on without obliging the Allies toperform their several Stipulations: and to make this appear, several Estimates were inserted of Men and Money, surnished by this Nation, over and above what was agreed to by Treaty with the Allies, and the States-General were in particular represented as not having contributed their share neither by Sea nor Land.

BUT this Representation was the Cause of many warm Speeches in the House of Commons. Those Members who had been in Employment during the late Administration, made it their business to clear themfelves, and those who had been concerned in the publick Affairs with them, of the Imputation of Injustice towards their Country, by shewing that in their time the utmost Endeavours had been used to oblige the Allies to perform their Stipulations, of which they faid the World could not be insensible, by reason of the many publick Memorials which had been sent both from the Court of Great Britain and the Elector of Hanover, to the Court of Vienne, to the general Diet of the Empire, and to the Courts of several other Princes, and that notwithstanding all these and several private Remonstrances sent by the Queen, at the desire of the Duke of Marlborough and the rest of her Majesty's Council, yet the Germans were cither either defective or so late in furnishing their Quota's, that the Operations of War were by that means often retarded. They also put the House in mind, that the same Dilatoriness was often complain'd of by the late King William, which obliged England and Holland to take a greater Burden upon them during the last War, than came to their share. And as to Portugal, that the Ministry judged it necessary at the beginning of the War, not to be over-pressing upon that Nation, not only for the take of our Commerce, but because our Alliances with the King of Portugal might be very precarious, if France should gain any Advantages on that fide; and whatever Exceedings happened on the account of Portugal, were necessarily connived at for the Benefit of the common Cause in general, and for the Advantage of Great Britain in particular, which must have been at great loss in carrying on the War by Sea, unless the Confederate Fleet had been allowed the Liberty of the Portugueeze Ports and Harbours.

AS to what concerned the States-General, the same Members also gave an Account of the several Transactions between the two Nations, for the managing the War, so as might tend most to the good of the common Cause, whereof they gave undeniable Proofs in all the Steps the late Ministry had taken with the Dutch. But the Dutch finding their Fidebity struck at by the House of Commons, Untivover a very full Memorial: iff their own Vindication, a Tranthe States alation of which was afobnisprinted here, whereby it appeared to half unbias de Perfons, that the Committee which drew up this Representation, to say nothing work of them, and undertaken what they did not understand, or at least would be at no applications, surracetted, amon or : saisq. flui, of this Affair. For they form'd their Judgment from the several Estimates of the effecgive Mendin the Field, landithe number of Ships that acted in commodion with those of Great Britain, whereby where indeed appear's to abegione Deficiencies which the States the treed in their Memorial, and made in appear that they had not fallen short but had even exceeded and gome beyond their Scipulations. ,1 They acknowledged that the Treaties not Alliance had sindeed obliged Great Britain and Holland to furnish their several Proportions of Meh; and Ships, to act in certain appointed: Places, but that the various Exigences of the War had rendered it impossible to act directly according to Stipulation without as manifest Detriment to the common Cause. Now the Committee had taken the Estimates from the Admiralty Office, and brought them to prove that the Dutch had fallen short of their number of Ships that were to have acted in concert concert with those of Great Britain, in the same Stations, because there were no other of the Dutth Ships inserted in the Office Books, but those which had join'd the British Fleet. But the States-General in Answer took notice, that when the French found they were unable to make head against the united Fleets of Great Britain and Holland, they left off: assembling their whole Strength at Sea, as they had done several times during the War, but lay ready to take all Opportunities to annoy the British and Dutch Trade. which obliged both. Nations to alter their Measures; and when it was found that the Proportion of Great Britain in the Channel and Mediterranean, required but a few Ships more to render them superiour to any number the French brought together in those Parts, the Dutch were allowed by consent to withdraw their other Ships, where they might be most needful; and for that reason they took wholly upon themselves the Guard and Defence of the North Seas, and of the Baltick; which was more expensive to them and of much greater Importance than if they had acted directly according to the Stipulations of the Treaties of Alliance between them and Great Britain. And they made it plainly appear from their own Estimates, which they inserted in this Memorial, that besides their whole Quota of Ships of War, they had fent out a considerable number of Frigats and Privateers, over and & bove their Stipulations; which were maintain'd at the Charge of the feveral Previnces, and did good Service. And as to their Proportion by Land, particularly in Portugal and Spain, wherein the Committee alledged they had been deficient; they faid, it was well known that the Queen had taken the Emperor's Proportion wholly upon her felf, on condition that he should take a greater Burden of the War in Italy and Germany, tho this Method was again chang'd upon the Evacuation of Italy; which shewed the Neceflity of varying from the general Schemes laid down at the beginning of the War. In like manner their Republick was excurd from fending their full Quots to Spains, in regard they were at much greater Charge in the Netherlands, than had been concerted in the Treaties of Alliance, having conflantly maintain'd greater numbers of Men there, than their Quota; having also stood to the Hazard and Expence of all Repairs of the Fortifications, and likewise in furnishing the Artillery made use of in all Sieges; befides their great Losses, by means of the Contributions exacted in the beginning of the War, from the Countries depending on their Frontiers and many other Expences, particularly in furnishing most of the Men, who composed the Garrisons in the new Conquests. All which the Durch reprefented sented in so plain and open a manner, that the Ministry were at a loss how to excuse this proceeding of their Friends in the House of. Commons; who being most of them raw unexperienc'd Men, and many of them violently prejudiced against the Dutch, they therefore voted this Memorial from the States-General, a pretended or forg'd Memorial, hoping by that means to hide their own Rashness and Folly, and the better to impose this Deceit on the Publick, Mr. Buckley, the Publisher and Printer thereof. was order'd into Custody. But as the World was soon convinced that this Memorial was Genuine, so an Answer was made to it in the Queen's Name, and conceived in such Terms, as might incense the Nation against them. This Answer was sign'd by Secretary St. John: It was very short and indirect, The Dutch there being no notice taken of the Particulars abus'd. mentioned in the Memorial, but only charging the States-General with Ingratitude and Want of Respect to the Queen, and all this with an Air of the highest Resentment, as if the had fuffered fome great Indignity at their hands. But the all unbiased Persons perceived plainly what a poor Evasion this was; yet it had in some measure the Effect which the Ministry intended by it, as it open'd Peoples Mouths against the Dutch, notwithstanding they had made it appear by this Memorial, that they had contributed in a very eminent manner towards the Advancement of the Common Cause, and that they were next to Great Britain in supporting the Protestant Interest, and the Liberties of Europe.

BUT how unseasonable these Jarrings were, while the Ministers of all sides were met together to treat of a general Peace, the Issue will show. For while some here in Engfand, were exclaiming against the Dutch, as a perfidious selfish People, who studied only their own Interest; and while others stood up no less hotly in their Vindication, being apprehensive what such Misunderstandings would produce; the French King took the advantage of these Confusions to make fome Offers by way of preliminary, which were highly dishonourable to Great Britain, and to all the Allies, having order'd his Ministers to make the following Proposals, which were sign'd Huxelles, and dated the eleventh of February N.S. "To Great Britain, " That he would acknowledge the Queen's

THESE were in Substance the Articles, which the French King proposed to the Allies, in order to a general Peace; which gave no small surprize to all Europe, in regard his Assairs were reduc'd at this time to a very low Ebb, excepting what expectations he might have from the Distractions in Great Britain.

THIS was the Language of the Cardinal and some of the chief Men of France, who knew full well the State of their Affairs. And it was even manifest from all their late proccedings, that they were brought on their last Legs, being obliged to raise Recruits by Lot out of all the Generalities and Parishes, and to compel most of those Recruits to go into the Service; and notwithstanding all the Plate and Money the King had every Year from the Spanish West-Indies, he was oblig'd to impose a Tax of the Tenth Penny on all Incomes by Houses, Lands, Annuities, or by other Profits, even as King John one of his Predeceffors had done when he was reduc'd to the lowest Ebb by Edward the Third, of England, and the Black Prince his Son; the said John being under the necessity ceffity of asking of the States of his Kingdom a Tax on all Revenues, whether arising from Goods or Offices, Wages or Salaries. The fame and other unusual Taxes had been rais'd during the last Years of the late War, whereby the Courage of the French Nation was quite funk and depressed; they had lost all the Conquests the King had made in his own lifetime; besides severatimportant Places which had been in the possession of that Crown for forme Ages before. The Allies were now A Recapiin possession of the Masse almost to the In-the conlet of the Sambre and the Schelde beyond quells in Tourney, and of the Lys fo far as it is navi-the Negable, And besides the Conquests of Bava-therlands. ria, Calogn, and other Countrys of Germamy; the Allies had also reduc'd so much of Guelderland, as had formerly been left to Spain by the Treaty of Munster. Likewise Limburg, Brabant, Mechlin, Flanders, two thirds of Hainault, with their Strong-Holds. the Conquest of which, were in a great meafure thought impracticable. The French had alfo loft a great part of Artois, and some other Provinces were brought under Contribution. And by the taking Bouchain the preceeding Campaign, and by the progress of the Confederate Army on the Scharpe and the Lys, they were become in effect Masters of two Rivers, which by means of the Deule and its Canal had been serviceable to the French for many Years in their continual In-L 4 vasions valions of the Spanish-Netherlands, of which they were now altogether deprived.

THUS I judg'd it necessary to make a short Recapitulation of the most important Conquests the Allies had made, during the Course of the War; that the Reader without going back into the Hillory of preceding Years, might at once have a View of the Condition to which France was reduced, when the above mentioned Offers were made; for by means of these Conquests; the French Fronticts mult have soon been devoured by the Armies on both fides, at the same time that it would have been difficult for the French to bring dry Forage-from their inmost Provinces to the said Fronties, for want of Rivers; whereas the Allies, by means of the above-mentioned Rivers, which were become part of their new Conquests, could easily form the necessary Magazines of Hay and Oats, in the Towns and Places lying nearest the Enemy ! To that the Allies would have had the Advantage for the future, of entering at any time into the Kingdom of France, and wanted only the Performance of one other Exploit, to have enabled them to penetrate to the Source of the Schelde, to the Somme and the Oyfe, to as the Spaniards might have done after the Battle of St. Quintin, which obliged France at that time to submit to the famous Treaty of Chateau Cambresis, by which the French yielded yielded up 198 Towns in lieu of three only, that Spain restored to them in Picardy.

THIS being the State of the French King's Affairs, upon the opening of the The Offers Congress at Utrecht; it was no won-of France, der that all the Allies received his Offers wed by the with the greatest Indignation, in regard they allies. could not well have expected worfe, had he been upon equal Terms with them. But the Subjects in this Kingdom, who had ventured a great part of their Substance, upon the publick Faith, were not a little incensed against the Ministry, believing it to be either thro' their Weakness and Insufficiency, that such dishonourable Proposals were offered, or else that they had been bribed into the Interest of France; and it was judged to be no Breach of Charity to think so, considering what Concessions the French King was willing to have made above two Years before, when Doway, Fort-Scharpe, Mons, Tournay, Bouchain, and several Countries of Importance were still in his hands. greatest and wealthiest Members of the House of Commons were irritated, upon account of their Possessions, and the Interest they had in preserving their Countries Liberties, which they judged must be on a very precarious footing, without a safe and advantageous Peace. The Peers also taking these Offers into Consideration, unanimously addressed the Queen, shewing their highest Resentment of

of this Affront, offered to her Majesty and the Nation; to which the Queen could not avoid giving a favourable Answer, whereby the Ministry were not a little puzzled how to excuse their own Conduct. However, they endeavoured to put the best Construction upon the French King's Offers, which they could do with the more freedom, that the French had model'd them in fuch Terms as might be interpreted either in a larger or more limited Sense; and the better to amuse the Publick, several new Plans were published by their Agents in the daily Papers, that the Genuine Offers might not be known to the Generality of the Nation, or at least that People might imagine they had brought the French to better Terms. And as the Ministry were fensible of their own Inabitity to obtain a good Peace, so they kept to their old Topick, in running down the Circumstances of the Nation, at the same time they took all imaginable pains falfely to extol the Power of France, which gain'd the more Credit with the common People, that the French had continual Resources, whereby they rather increased than diminished their Armies; which feem'd strange to those who had some feeling of the publick Burden at home, but were unacquainted with the State of the . War, and of Foreign Affairs. Most People were indeed but too full of Expectations at the beginning of the War, flattering themfelves selves after every fignal Victory, that all would be over in a short time, and that the Duke of Marlborough would soon have it in his power to go to Paris. But they did not consider the vast Strength and Importance of the Countries and Fortresses in the possession of France, which were to be won before that could be done: so that when the Allies had with the Expence of much Blood and Treasure, very near accomplished that which most Men had so long looked for, yet because this did not come to pass in the time, which themselves in their own fond Conocits had limited, many therefore grew altogether incredulous; especially as they had imbib'd the worst Impressions of those who had the Management of the War, so that they looked upon it to be as far as ever from coming to a Period: and this Humour, which prevail'd very much, was encouraged by the Ministry and their Agents, and tended greatly to forward their Designs.

HOWEVER the Ministry had much ado to manage their Point; for the their Delusions went very far among the common Poople, and among many others who were drawn over to their side by false Motives, or such as laboured under strong Prejudices, or were ignorant of those things that made for the true Interest of their Country, yet it was observable that they began to lose ground among some of the better Sort of their

their own Party, The Earl of Nottingham, The Earl tho at first he fided with the Court, yet he tingham and others foon left them, when he perceived the Tendency of their Measures and the unhappy Ministry. Prospect of Affairs under their Management, and others were ready to abandon their Interest with the more Freedom, that they had his Example to follow: which proved a no fmall Disappointment to them, because the Earl's Zeal for the Established Church, about which that Party had made so great an Outcry, was known to be such as had never been called in question; and therefore his falling off, caused several other great Men to sit but loosely to them afterwards. This Coldness towards the Ministry was so plainly vifible among the Lords, that being fearful lest their Schemes and Projects might meet with a Stop there, and thereby issue in their own tis'd in any former Reign, nor was it ever known known that such a Number of Peers were created at one Time.

IT would be almost endless to recount all the Artifices were set on foot about this time by the Queen's Ministers and their Agents, to impose as well on their Friends as on those who opposed them. The Queen having declared, at the opening of this Session, that she intended to carry on the War vigorously, until she should obtain honourable Terms of the Enemy, and having by that means got a Supply of near 7 Millions, which was more than had been raised at any time fince the War began; so that they might carry on their Farce the better, they made all the usual Preparations for the ensuing Campaign: the Duke of Ormond had orders to make ready with all possible expedition to go over to the Army, and things were got in sufficient forwardness, that they might take the Field betimes; upon which most People were willing to wait patiently for the Issue, in hopes another Campaign, if the Events should prove favourable, might bring Affairs to a better Conclusion than many expected. For tho the wifer Sort had indeed no great Expectations from the Duke of Ormond, whom they knew to be no great Head-piece, and of small Experience; yet their Confidence was very great in Prince Eugene and the other old Generals, both Foreigners and Englishmen, that they would do their utmost at such an extraordinary Conjuncture: so that the Nation was now full of Expectations, both from the Army and the Congress.

THE Duke of Ormond, according to his Orders, went to Holland, and arrived at the Hague some time before the Campaign was opened, where he was received by the States-General with the same outward Marks of Distinction they had usually shewn to the Duke of Marlborough; and it was no small The Duke Satisfaction to many, that he gave the States

of Ormond's

Affurances in the Queen's Name, that he would act in concert with the Allies. Army was also in a better Condition, and all Things in greater forwardness than had been' known since the War began. For the Germans, when they understood that the Duke of Marlborough was out of all Favour, bestirred themselves with more than ordinary Diligence, and were got into the Field much sooner than usual; so that the Confederate Army made a very noble Appearance, and were never so advantageously posted, having all the Country behind, in full Possession, with fine navigable Rivers, and a vast number of Barks and small Vessels to supply them with all manner of Necessaries. The French, who continued still under the Command of the Maishal Villars, lay very open with their Right at Castelet, and their left near Cambray, having indeed the Schelde

before them, but the Country all open between the Spring-head of that River and the Somme, which gave no small Jealousy to the Confederate Generals, that there might be some under-hand Dealings between the English Ministry and the Court of France, because they knew Villars to be a Man who spared no Pains or Expence to fecure himself, and his Men from Danger. Nevertheless Prince Eugene made all the necessary Dispositions to give him Battle. But when he came to confer with the Duke of Ormond, he found him very backward to engage; which made the Prince and the Confederate Generals, press the Matter home upon him; so that after several indirect Answers, he told them he had received positive Orders from the His Orders Queen, not to consent to a Battle, but fight. that he was not restrained from engaging with them in a Siege. This put the Generals into a very great Confusion, and some time was fpent in consulting what Resolution they had best to take under this Disappointment; but at last they agreed to invest Quesnoy, and having made all things ready for that purpose, the Duke of Ormond took upon him to cover the Siege.

BUT it is impossible to express how

BUT it is impossible to express how much the Allies were alarm'd at this underhand dealing of the English Ministers, whereby they indeed greatly forfeited the Queen's Honour Honour in giving the Duke Orders so very contrary to what he had declared to the States-General in her Name: for the Generals forthwith sent Dispatches to their several Courts, and the News was soon spread over all Europe. As for the States Field-Deputies, who are Commissioners appointed by the States-General to attend their Armies partly as Overseers, and partly as Assistants, they sent off two Expresses immediately, one to their Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, and another to the Hague. The Dutch Minifters at Utrecht delay'd no time, but as soon as their Express came to their hands, they acquainted the Bishop of Bristol with the Contents of it; and as they could not forbear doing it with some Resentment, it provoked the Bishop's Passion, who told them with a great deal of warmth, that he had Orders to let them know his Mistress's " That she looked on herself Sentiments:

" to be loofed from all Engagements and thong the "Alliances with their State." But as such a Declaration might be of fatal Consequence at so Critical a Time; the States-General therefore could not be silent, but sent a Letter immediately to the Queen, wherein they fet forth the many ill Consequences that might attend her present Measures, and how her Majesty's late Orders had already lost the Allies the fairest Opportunity they ever had or perhaps might have for the future, giving giving a decisive Blow to the Enemy; but that these Orders had not given them so much surprize as the Bishop of Bristol's Dcclaration to their Ministers at Utrecht. the same Letter they also gave their Reasons The States. for their not having hitherto acquiesced to General treat upon the French Proposals, and likewise success charged the Queen modestly with Breach with of Promise, in not prosecuting the War in Breach of Conjunction with her Allies, as the Duke of Ormand had declared to them in her Name: besides which many other things were freely represented to her. But her Ministers were too far gone in the Interest of France, to advise her to any thing that might either be for her own Honour or the real Good of the Common Cause; and these Orders to the Duke had brought them into such a Dilemma, that they could not easily extricate themselves again. So that they employ'd some Divines to persuade the Queen, that it was her Duty to fave the shedding of Christian Blood; which indeed was a very plausible Argument to be made use of with a Woman of so much Delicacy, tho it proved the Cause of more Bloodshed afterwards, and of many other ill Consequences, as will appear by the Sequel.

BUT this Letter from the States-General gaul'd the Ministry so sorely, that they drew up a very sharp Answer to it in the Queen's

M

Name, wherein the blame was laid wholly on their Obstinacy, and the Queen vindicated only in general Terms, as if she had been in the right and they altogether in the wrong; which kind of Answer laid them open to all Men of Sense, and discovered plainly where the fault lay. There was indeed one Circumstance which gave our Ministers a verv plausible colour of Resentment. For the Letter from the States-General was in print almost as soon as it was communicated to the Queen, and therefore it was styl'd in the Queen's Answer, " An Appeal to the Péo-" ple rather than an Address to the Sove-" reign, and that her Honour would not " permit her to give Answer to any that " should come in that manner for the fu-" ture." Now the States knew very well the Temperand Genius of our Ministers and their Party, and therefore that the People of Great Britain might have right Information of their own Affairs, so far as they interfered with their Republick, and likewise that their own Subjects might be acquainted with their Proceedings, and to justify their Conduct in the fight of the other Allies; had ordered their Letter to be published in Holland, as foon as their Disparches were fealed up for England, that no time might be lost at so hazardous a Conjuncture': but the Mail happening to be detain'd by contrary Winds, the same Wind that brought the Queen's Queen's Letter, also brought over the Dutch News-Papers, wherein that Letter was printed, so that it was translated into the English Papers in a few days. But all this would not have disgusted our Courtiers, had not the Letter exposed their ill Conduct to the World, particularly in what related to the Queen's Breach of Promise, and her abandoning her Treaties and Engagements; and therefore to prevent the ill Consequences this might have among the People, the Ministry influenced their Friends and Dependents in the House of Commons for the greater Pomp and Solemnity to pass their publick Censure upon it, and accordingly

a Vote was procured in that House, "De-Avote of claring the printing of the said Letter be of Comfore it had been presented to the Queen, mons a-

" jefty, and ordered an Address to be drawn

" up, beseeching her Majesty would give no .

" Memorials sent from the States-General

"in that manner." Which Vote was to corroborate what the Queen had already done in her Answer, and to inspire the ignorant and deluded Part of the Nation with an implacable dislike to the Dutch, against whom they had already imbib'd many Prejudices.

BUT this was not done without very great Opposition, for those who had been formerly in Power were under the deepest

Concern to see things managed in so unaccountable a manner, and considering the ill Effects such publick Decisions might have, did all they could to put by the faid Resolve, as it might be the means to dishearten all the Allies, or drive them on to fuch Measures, as might in the end be prejudicial to Great Britain; and on the other hand give the greatest Encouragement to the common Enemy, to impose his own Terms on every one of the Allies, when he should find the most considerable among them at variance: besides the mischief it might do among the giddy Multitude at home, who had already imbib'd many faral Prejudices, not only with respect to the Dutch, but against every thing that made for the true Interest of their Country; but especially that the major Part were more apt to judge by fuch Publick Decisions, than from any impartial Examination into the things themfelves. But when these Gentlemen found that all their Arguments could avail nothing, they endeavoured to promote another Resolve, which might at least help to keep up the Honour and Reputation of their Country, by making it appear to the World, that these Proceedings were not approved excepting only by such as were guided by the Court, or imposed on by the Ministry, and therefore Mr. Pulteney mov'd to draw up an Addrcs dress to the Queen, " Declaring the Surprize " many of her good Subjects were under at the late Orders given to the Duke of Or-" mond not to fight the common Enemy, and that from a deep Sense of the ill Con-" sequences that might arise from thence to the Common Cause, they should beseech " her Majesty to give Instructions to her Ge-" neral to prosecute the War with the ut-" most Vigour in conjunction with the Allies, as the furest means to procure a safe and honourable Peace." This Motion was back'd by many Great Men, but as the Ministry had been the Advisers of the Duke's Orders not to fight, and as this Motion struck so home at their present Designs, it could not be expected they should be able to go through with it against so great a Majoritys tho none of the Ministers had much to say in defence of the present Measures, but only screen'd themselves under the Queen's Authority, and branded those with Disloyalty, who opposed their Proceedings.

THIS Affair was about the same time brought into the House of Peers by the Lord Halifax, who made a fine Speech, wherein he shewed the dangerous Consequences of putting a stop to the Operations of War, and of a separate Peace with France, which the Ministry had now in view. This Lord was back'd by the Earl of Wharton, and several other GreatMen, who were like to have gain'd their Point against the Court Party, who had little to say for themselves further, than that they were commanded by the Queen to acquaint the House, that she had sent Orders to the Duke of Ormond to join with the Allies in a Siege, being willing to shift off the Question concerning his Orders of Reftraint; and when it was alledg'd the Ministry had some Design of making a separate Peace, one of them made Answer, that it would be knavish, foolish, and villanous. But this gave very little satisfaction, because by not fighting the Enemy they had loft the opportunity of laying Siege to Cambraj, which open'd a direct way into France, and the befieging any other place, was only lofing time and wasting the Subsidies that had been raised for this Year's Service: so that the Argument was purfued very hotly for some time, to have an Address presented to the Queen concerning the Duke's Orders, until the Lord Treasurer Oxford put an end to the Debate, by affuring the Lords that the Oueen would in a few days lay before them from the Throne the Conditions on which a general Peace might be made, which he doubted not would give them entire satisfaction; whereupon several Peers, who had stood up for the Address, acquiesced out of Respect and Duty to the Queen. But those who were the most zealous against the Proceedings of the Ministry, entered their Protest

Protest in three Articles against the Duke's Orders.

FIRST, "That they were convinc'd the A Protest C Duke of Ormond lay under some Or-against the der of Restraint, not only from the Ac-Ormond's counts that were publick, that both Prince Orders. Eugene and the States Deputies earnestly pressed him to join in attacking the French "Army, which was then known to be much inferiour to that of the Allies both in the number and condition of their Troops; but also as nothing of that whole matter had been denied by the Lords, who had the means of knowing these Facts, as " would undoubtedly have been done, had not the said Facts been true, since no scru-" ple was made of acquainting the House with a subsequent Order very lately sent to the Duke of Ormond, allowing him to join in a Siege; which was a further Evidence that he had before some Order of Restraint, for otherwise this last Order would be unnecessary and absurd: it being a general, constant, and standing Instruction to every Commander in chief, both by Land and Sea, to do his utmost Endeavours to annoy the Enemy; and that it was manifest by this last Order, that even in the Opinion of the Ministers it was expedient to take off this Restraint in some degree, and the leaving the Duke of Or-" mond still under a Restraint from giving M 4

" Battle to the French, seem'd unaccoun-" table and inconsistent with the Liberty in-"dulged to him of joining in a Siege, and " rendered it altogether useless, because no " place when taken could be of fuch advan-" tage to the Allies as Cambray, which o-" pened a free Passage for the Army into " the Heart of France; and because it was " impossible to besiege that place, without " dislodging the French from their Encamp-" ment; and this also was impossible, if the " French would keep their ground. Other "Attempts seem'd to be of little use, but " might serve to give the French time, which they did not want Skill to im-" prove. SECONDLY, "That they conceiv'dit " would be derogatory to the Queen's Ho-would be derogatory to the Queen's Honour, to publick Faith, and that Justice, which was due to the Allies, and that it was a fort of imposing a Cessation of Arms on them without their Consent, and in the most prejudicial manner, because they were not so much as acquainted with it, and might thereby be led into great Diffi" culties, besides that it frustrated all essen" tial Advantages against the common Enc-

my, which might be of fatal Confequence

" to the Nation and to all Europe.

THIRDLY, "Because it was acknowledgded that a general Peace was not concluded, as indeed it was very unlikely it structures."

" should, there having been no Answers " given in writing by the French to the specifick Demands of the Allies, tho the " same were deliver'd to the French three " Months before this time, besides that it " was declared by an Eminent Person in the " Ministry, That there was no separate " Peace, and that such a Peace would be " foolish, knavish, and villanous; and there-" fore while the Nation was in War, with-" out any Security of a Peace, they con-" ceiv'd that such an Order of Restraint was " a plain Neglect of all those happy Op-" portunities, which Providence had of late " put into the hands of the Confederates, of " fubduing the common Enemy, and forcing " him to a just and honourable Peace; and "that it was imprudent and dangerous to " rely on the Promises of France, which " were so far from being any Security, that " even in their Opinion, a Peace would not " be safe, unless it was so satisfactory to all " the Allies, that they should be willing to " join with Great Britain in a mutual Guaff ranty of it. And the Queen having with " great Wisdom declared to the Parliament, "That the best means of obtaining a good " Peace, was to make early Preparations " for War, and by a vigorous Prosecution

" of it: And since the Parliament had with of it: And since the Parliament had with " great Duty and Deference to her Maje-" fly, and from a just Zeal to the Interest of " their Country and of all Europe, gi-"ven very great Supplies for that Pur-" pole; they conceived that such an Or-" der of Restraint being very different " from that Declaration of the Queen, " must be the Effect of very ill Advice, " by which the Parliament's good Inten-"tions would be defeated, and all those " heavy Loads of Taxes, which they had for " fuch good Purposes cheerfully given, ren-" dered fruitless and unnecessary, and might " in conclusion, after the Nation had thus " trifled away its Wealth and Time, be " brought under the necessity of accepting " such a Peace, as it should please an inso-" lent and domineering Enemy to give."

THE Peers who sign'd this Protest were the Dukes of Devonsbire, Marlborough, Rutland, Bolton, Montagu, and Somerset. The Marquess of Dorchester. The Earls of Wharton, Derby, Nottingham, Bridgwater, Godolphin, Carlisle, Orford, and Scarborough. The Lord Viscount Townsbend. The Bishops of Oxford, Sarum, Bangor, and St. Asaph: and the Lords Rockingham, Cowper, Haversbam, Mohun, and Halifax.

THE Queen came to the House in a few Days after this, as the Lord Treasurer had promised, and made a long Speech, containing the Terms she had procured of the French King, on which she said a general Peace might be made, being in substance as follows.

"THAT the affuring the Protestant Tho

"Succession, as by Law established in the Speech con"House of Hanover, being what she had corning the "nearest at Heart; she had taken particular Peace.

"care not only to have that acknowledged
in the strongest Terms, but to have an ad-

" in the strongest Terms, but to have an additional Security, by the removal of the "Person out of the Dominions of France,

" who had pretended to disturb the said

" Settlement.

" AND with respect to the present War, " as the Apprehension lest Spain and the " West-Indies might be united to France, " was the chief Inducement to begin it, so " the effectual preventing of such an Union " was the Principle she had laid down at the " Commencement of this Treaty e but for-" mer Examples, and the late Negociations " shewing how difficult it was to find means " to accomplish this Work, she had there-" fore not contented herself with such as " were speculative, or depend on Treaties " only, but had insisted on what was solid, " and to have at hand the Power of execu-" ting what should be agreed; and therefore " fhe could tell them that France was at " last brought to offer, that the Duke of An-" jou should for himself and his Descendants
" renounce for ever all Claim to the Crown of France; and that this important Article " might

" might be exposed to no hazard, the Per-" formance was to accompany the Promise, " in regard the Succession to the Crown of " France was to be declar'd after the Death " of the pefent Dauphin, and his Sons, to be " in the Duke of Berry and his Sons, the "Duke of Orleans and his Sons, and so on " to the rest of the House of Bourbon. " AS to Spain and the Indies, the Suc-" cession to these Dominions after the Duke " of Anjou and his Children, was to descend " to such Prince as should be agreed on at " the Treaty, for ever excluding the rest of the " House of Bourbon, all which was offer'd to " be ratify'd in the most Strong and Solemn Manner both in France and Spain: and " that these two Crowns, as well as all the other Powers engaged in the War, should be Guarrantees for the same. That the " Nature of this Stipulation was such, that " it even executed it felf, because it was the Interest of Spain to support it, and the " Persons to whom the Succession of France " should belong, would be ready and pow-" erful enough to vindicate their own Right; " fo that upon this Basis, France and Spain " would be more effectually divided than ever, and the Ballance of Power in Euce rope would be fixed, and remain liable to 46 as few Accidents as Human Affairs could

" AS to Commerce, she said the Excel-" five Duties laid on some Goods, and the " Prohibition of others, made it impossible " to finish that part so soon as was desired ; " but that care had been taken to establish a " Method of settling that matter, and in the " mean time Provision was made that the " same Privileges and Advantages should be " obtained for Great Britain, that France " should grant to any other Nation. " France had consented to yield the whole " Island of St. Christopher, with all Hud-" fon's Bay and Streights, and would deli-" ver up the Island of Newfoundland with " Placentia, and would make an absolute " Cession of Annapolis with the rest of No-" va Scotia or Acadia; and that the Safe-"ty of the Home Trade would be better " provided for, by the Demolition of Dun-" kirk. That the Mediterranean Trade and " the Interest of the British Nation in those " Parts, would be secured by the Possession " of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, with the " whole Island of Minorca, which were of-" fered to remain in her hands. That the " Trade to Spain and the West-Indies might " in general be settled as it was in the time " of the late King Charles the Second of " Spain, with a particular Provision, that " all Advantages, which had, or might here-" after be granted to any other Nation by " Spain, should in like manner be allowed " to the Subjects of Great Britain. But " the part the British Nation had born in "the Profecution of the War, having enti-"tled her to some Distinction in the Terms of Peace, she had insisted and obtained that " the Assento, or Contract for furnishing " the Spanish West-Indies with Negroes, " should be made for the Term of 30 Years " in the same manner as had been enjoy'd " by the French for these 10 Years past. 4 AS to the Interest of the Confederates. "the Queen faid she had not taken upon " her to determine that, but had left their " Affairs to be adjusted at Utrecht, where " her best Endeavours should be employ'd, " as they had hitherto been, to procure every " one of them all just and reasonable satis-" faction: but in the mean while she thought " proper to acquaint them, that France " had offer'd to make the Rhine the Barrier " of the Empire, to yield Brifack, Fort-" Keyl, and Landau, and to rafe all For-" tresses both on the other side the Rhine, " and in that River. "AND as to the Protestant Interest in "Germany, there would be on the part of " France no Objection made to the refettling "thereof on the foot of the Treaty of West-" phalia.

"THAT the Spanish Netherlands might go to his Imperial Majesty, and that the Kingdoms of Naples and Sardinia, the Dutchy

"Dutchy of Milan and the Places belonging to Spain on the Coast of Tuscany, these might likewise be yielded to the Emperor; and tho' there remained no Dispute concerning the Cession of the Kingdom of Sieily by the Duke of Anjou, yet there was no Disposition made thereof:

"AND as to the Interest of the States"General with respect to Commerce, she "said their Demands were agreed to, with "the Exception only of a few Species of "Merchandize; and the intire Barrier, as "demanded by the States in 1709, except
"two or three Places at most, which she
"doubted not might be so settled, as to "render them perfectly secure against any
"Enterprize on the part of France; which
"she said was the Foundation of all her En"gagements with that Republick.

"AS to the Demands of Portugal, as "these depended on the Disposition of Spain, and that Article having been long in dispute, so it was not yet possible to make any considerable progress therein. But that her Plenipotentiaries would now have an opportunity to assist that Prince in his Pretensions. And those of the King of Prussia were such, as she hoped would admit of no dissiculty on the part of France; and that she would not be wanting to procure all she could for so good an Ally. "AND

"AND as to the difference between " the Barrier demanded for the Duke of " Savor in 1709, and the Offers now made " by France, that they were very inconsiderable: but that Prince having so signal-" ly distinguished himself in the Common " Cause, she was therefore endeavouring to or procure him still farther Advantages. "THAT France had consented that the 66 Elector Palatine should continue his pre-" fent Rank among the Electors, and re-main in possession of the Upper Palatinate. And that the Electoral Dignity " should likewise be acknowledged in the " House of Hanover, according to the Ar-" ticles inserted at that Prince's desire: and

" that she doubted not of her being able to " secure to the rest of the Allies their se-« veral Demands."

THO this Speech was looked upon to be ambiguous in some things, and exceptions ble in others, by those who opposed the Ministry; yet the Court-Party carried an Address of Thanks in the House of Commons, by a very great Majority: but it created some

the House of Peers.

Debates in very hot Debates in the House of Peers, particularly concerning the Demolition of Dunkirk, for which the French demanded a good Equivalent, even by the Confession of some of the Ministers themselves, which several Lords insisted to have communicated to the Parliament. But this Debate being over-ruled by fome Noblemen in the Court-Interest; a Motion was thereupon made. "To return the Queen Thanks for her " most Gracious Speech, and for her extraordinary Condescension in communicating to her Parliament the Terms on " which a general Peace might be made, and to express the intire Satisfaction of " that House in her Majesty's great Care for " fecuring the Protestant Succession in the " House of HANOVER, and for steddily or pursuing the true Interest of her own King-"doms, and for endeavouring to procure " to her Allies what was due to them by "Treaties; and to assure the Queen, that " they did entirely rely on her Majesty's "Wildom to finish this great and good " Work." The Lords of the opposite Party, when they found they could not make head against so powerful a Stream, only objected against the Words entirely rely, which indeed was relying on the Ministry, and therefore they moved that these Words might be added, viz. "To pray her Ma-" jesty to take such Measures in concert with " her Allies, as might induce them to join with her in a mutual Guaranty." But after a Debate, wherein the Lords Cowper, Wharton, and Halifax signalized themselves very much, it was carried against them by a confiderable Majority; whereupon the same Lords, who made the other Protest a-N gainst gainst the Orders given to the Duke of Or mond entered a very memorable one on this Occasion, and were also join'd by some other Peers, who had not figned the former. Their Reasons were at full length as follows:

"We think it necessary to have the Secu-" rity proposed of a general Guaranty, and " the rather because we conceive the Terms " of Peace that are offered, must have pro-" ceeded from a separate Negociation carried on by the Ministers with France, without

A memorable frotest in that Howfe.

any communication thereof to the principal " Allies, particularly the States-General, (as they say in their Letter to her Majesty) whose Interest her Majesty was pleased " to declare to this Parliament, she looked " upon as inseparable from her own: 'And we conceive this Negociation to be con" trary to those Orders which her Majesty " declared to this House in Answer to their " Address, that she had given to her Pleni-

" potentiaries at Utrecht to concert with those of her Allies, and the Resolution expressed in her Message January 17th; " Of a strict Union, in which she proposed " to join with them, in order to obtain a

" good Peace, and to guarantee and support " the same; as she had before declared in her

Speech at the opening of this Session,

" That she would unite with them in the " strictest Engagements for continuing the "Alliance, in order to render the general

" Peace

" Peace secure and lasting. And contrary " to the eighth Article of the grand Alliance, " which expressly obliges the Allies not to " treat unless jointly, and with the com-" mon Advice of the other Parties. " AND we conceive that the Refusal of " these Words proposed to be added, may " be look'd on by the Allies, as if this House " approved this Method of transacting with " France, which may seem to them to tend " to a separate Peace, of which her Ma-" jesty has declared her dislike; and which " was acknowledged in this House to be " foolist and knavist, and would be of " pernicious Consequence to this Kingdom, by preventing that Guaranty of Peace by " the Allies, which is so absolutely necessary " for their mutual Security, and leave us exposed to the Power of France; there " being little reason to expect their future "Help, after such a gross Breach of Trust. "AND we further conceive that furch a feparate Proceeding may create in the Al-" lies so great a Distrust, as may tempt them " to take the like Measures, and so give the " French opportunity to break that Union, which has hitherto been so useful to us and formidable to them; any appearance whereof must encourage France either to delay the Conclusion of a Peace, or to impose on the Allies in the further Progress cc of the Treaty.

" A perfect Union among the Allies " seems to us to be the more necessary in the " present case, because the Foundation on " which all the Offers of France relating " to Great Britain, as well as the Allies, " are built, viz. a Renunciation of the " Duke of Anjou to that Kingdom, is in a our opinion so fallacious, that no reaso-" nable Man, much less whole Nations can 66 look on it as any Security. Experience " may sufficiently convince us how little " we ought to rely on the Renunciation of " the House of Bourbon, and tho the pre-" sent Duke of Anjou should happen to think himself bound by his own Act, which his Grandfather did not, yet will " his Descendants be at liberty to say, That u no Att of his could deprive them of their Birthright; and especially when it is such a Right, as in the Opinion of all " Frenchmen, ought inevitably to be main-." tained by the fundamental Constitution " of the Kingdom of France. " AND we humbly think it unsafe to de-" pend upon this principal Part of the Treaty's executing its self, by supposing it will be the Interest of France to support

" it; since on the contrary it is manifest by " the French Endeavours ever since the Py-" renean Treaty to unite the Monarchies

" of France and Spain, they look on " that Union to be their greatest Interest, and the most effectual Means of establishing the Universal Monarchy in the House 4 of Bourbon. " A N D if it were reasonable to imagine that the two Crowns of France and Spains " should remain in distant Branches of the "House of Bourbon, yet this is contrary to " the Grand Alliance it self, which recites " the Usurpation of the Spanish Monarchy " by the French King for the Duke of Anjon, as the principal Cause of this War. "AS to Port-mahon, Gibraltar, the Assento, and other Advantages to Britain proposed by France, besides that they are all precarious, and in the power of " France and Spain to take from us when they please; considering the Scituation 66 of those Kingdoms, and the vast Wealth and Strength which will be left to them; " we conceive it impossible for any Man to 46 look on these as a Compensation to Bri-" tain in any degree for the leaving Spain and the Indies in the Possession of the 46 House of Bourbon, besides other mani-44 festly fatal Consequences must be ex-" treamly prejudicial to our Woollen Manufacture, if it does not entirely ruin it. " A S to the Demolition of Dunkirk, tho we own it will be a great safety to our "Home Trade, yet we have reason to apge prehend by what was faid in the Debate.

" that it is not yet agreed to be demolish'd N 3

without an Equivalent for it to the French King's satisfaction; and in all the Particulars relating to the Allies, tho they are not perfectly adjusted, yet by what does appear concerning them, the Allies are likely to be left in such a State of Insecurity, as is absolutely inconsistent with our own safety. The Rhine is proposed for a Barrier for the Empire, which leaves Strasbourg and Huningen in the hands of the French, the sormer of which has always been looked on as the Key of the Empire.

"THE Proposals of France relating to the Barrier to the States-General, not only deprive them of all the Places taken

"fince the Year 1709; but also of two or " three Places more included in the Demands made by the States in that Year,

" which will render their Barrier wholly in"fufficient, and consequently very much

" weaken the Security of Britain.

" PORTUGAL seems to be wholly abandoned to the Power of Spain, not with standing the great Advantage we have re" ceived during this War by our Trade with that Kingdom, which might still be ex-

" treamly beneficial to us.

"UPON the whole, there is so very little and inconsiderable a Difference between these Offers of France, and those signed Huxelles, (as appears to us upon comparing them together,) that both " seem to be the Effect of a secret and " particular Negociation with France; and this House having unanimously concurred in expressing to her Majesty their 44 utmost Resentment at those Terms offer'd 6 to her Majesty and her Allies by the Ple-" nipotentiaries of France, and her Maje-" fty having graciously accepted that our " Address, and rewarded that Duty and " Zeal with her hearty Thanks, we cannot " in respect to her Majesty or Justice to our Country, retract that Opinion, nor think " the Terms now good for us or the Allies, " or give any seeming Approbation of them, " which then were received by this House and all the Allies with Scorn and Detestation.

"made at Utrecht, February 4" N. S. and figued

"FOR these Reasons we are of Opinion that the Offers of France are fallacious and insnaring, no way proportioned to the Advantages, which her Majesty (from the great Successes with which it has pleased God to bless her and her Allies, during the whole course of this War,) might justly expect for her own Kingdoms and for them; very insufficient for preserving a Ballance of Power in Europe, for the future Security of her Majesty and her Allies, tho they should be never so exactly performed; and yet even such as they are,

THESE were the Reasons which the a-Protestex- bove mentioned Lords gave against the pungdout Terms of Peace recited in her Majesty's Speech; which so much exposed the Ministry, that their Friends ordered them to be expunged out of the Books of the House; but being foon after printed with the other concerning the Duke's Orders of Restraint, this so much incensed the Courtiers, that they procured a Committee of the Lords to enquire after the Publication of this and the other Protest: but not being able to make any Discovery, or rather not being very willing to do it, they apply'd by Address to the Queen, and obtained an Order of Council for finding out the Printers and Publishers thereof; which was nothing but an empty Noise, as appeared afterwards, and the great Bustle made about it, was more to prepossess the Nation against the Sentiments of the opposite Party, than out of any real Desire of a Discovery.

ABOUT the same time there was a no less struggle in the House of Commons concerning this new-modelled Scheme of Peace; for the that House voted an

HISTORY of Queen ANNE.

Address of Thanks to the Queen, as has been taken notice, yet some were unwilling to let the Matter pass fo: and therefore they proposed the Allies should become Guarantees for the Protestant Succession, in the House of Hanover; and in order thereunto, AGuaran-Mr. Hambden made a Motion for an Ad-77 Proposes dress. Endeavours were first made to have coffion in that Motion dropped, but Mr. Hambden, the House and some others insisting strenuously to have the Question put, the same was done accordingly; but it was carried in the Negative, by a Majority of a Hundred and thirtythree Voices, against Thirty-eight. And the House had no other way to vindicate themselves in this Vote, but by representing those who promoted it, as factious Persons, who made it their business to create Jealousies of the Queen, in the Minds of the People, and therefore they procured this strange Resolve to incense their Party against them, and to put them out of all Favour with the Queen, viz. " That the House had so winner'd great Confidence in her Majesty's repeated by another Declarations, for securing the Protestant Resolve. "Succession, as established on the House of " Hanover, that they could never doubt " of her taking the proper Measures for " the Security thereof, and that they would " support her Majesty against Faction at 66 home, and her Enemies abroad. whom the Queen had now created Viscount Bolingbroke, was sent over to the Court of France, who it feems had full Power to agree to a Cessation of Arms; notwithstanding all the Remonstrances had been made in both Houses, against secret and separate Negotiatons: for, upon this, the Duke of Acessation Ormand had orders sent him to publish a Cessation of Arms, tho' the Seige of Quesnoy was not yet ended; and not only to withdraw the British Troops from the Allies, but the Foreigners in the Pay of Britain. It is easy to imagine the great Confusion the Allies were brought into by this extraordinary Treatment. However, Prince Eugene and the States Field-Deputies pressed the Duke earnestly to suspend the Execution of his Orders, till they had acquainted their several Courts with them, but this it seems could not be done. Nevertheless the Foreign Generals in the Service of Britain, chose rather to run the hazard of losing their Pay, than abandon the Common Cause, so that the Allies made themselves Masters of Quefnoy; and the Duke was forced to take his leave of the Army without any other Foreigners to accompany him, except two or three Battalions of Holfteiners, and the Leigois Regiment of Dragoons of Walef, whose Pay as Major-General in the Dutch Service was presently struck off. It was at that time given out that the Duke was to march into the French Territories, to quarter in the Chattelany of Tpres; and if it had been so, perhaps the other Allies might also have been brought to consent to a Cessation, as it might in some measure have secured them in the Conquests they had already made; but whatever might be proposed, it is probable the French had no such Intention. For the Duke, upon leaving the Confederates, directed his March for Ghent, where he was not very well received, neither would the Dutch suffer him to enter any of their Garrisons as he passed by.

THE other Allies continued still in their Resolution to go on with the War, but the British Troops leaving them after they had proceeded so far, quite broke all their Measures, and brought them into great jeopardy. They invested Landrecy soon after, but their Army was now in so dangerous a Scituation, that they lost a very considerable Number, especially of the Dutch, who

were cut off near Denain, before Prince

Engene could come to their Relief. After this, the French made themselves Masters of Mortagne, St. Amand, Marchienne and fatal to the other Places; and becoming also by this means Masters of the Scharpe, they seezed the great Magazines that were laid up for the Confederate Army. This proved so great a loss to the Confederates, that they were not able to oppose the French in any thing during the Campaign; for the French also retook Doway, Bouchain, and some other places of less Note: and while these things were transacting in the Field, between the French and the Allies, the Suspension Treaty between Britain and France was prolonged. and matters were fo managed by the Lord Bolingbrake, who was all this time at the Court of France; that upon the Conclufion of this Treaty, a Body of English Soldiers were admitted into Dunkirk, which had a good outlide Appearance, with respect to what was promised concerning its Demolition; and indeed, if this had not been procured upon the Duke of Ormand's withdrawing from the Allies, all the Projects of our Ministers might have soon fallen to the ground, and the French been reduced to the same Circumstances they were in before these Negociations were set on foot.

IN the mean while, Orders were fent to Brigadier Price, who commanded the British Troops in Spain, to declare a Cessation of Arms for four Months. But the way taken to convey these Orders to the Brigadier's namds was very extraordinary, and discover'd yet more of the underhand dealings between :he Courts of Britain and France: Some days pefore came a Trumpeter from the Enemy to Field-Marshal Staremberg's Quarters with a Letter to reclaim certain Prisoners, having some other Messages of small Consequence; but being ask'd whether he had more Letters about him, he own'd that he was intrusted with another Letter, which being demanded of him was found directed to the commanding Officer of the British Forces. The Trumpeter was severely threatned for bringing Letters for any other than the Commander in chief, to whom alone, according to the Rules of War, Letters ought to be directed, and by him only opened; whereupon Starembergh sent back the Letter to Prince Tferclaes de Tilly, who commanded the French and Spaniards, and from whom it came, and wrote to him, " That he thought a General should be better acquainted with the Laws and Customs of War, than to act in such a manner; and if the like was done again, he might depend upon it " the Bearer should be hang'd." The Prince returned a very civil Answer; but two days after he made use of another Artifice: he caused a subaltern Officer of an Irish Regiment

ment to act the Part of a Deserter, by whom he sent a second Letter, ordering him to conceal it carefully, and to deliver it to none but the English Brigadier himself, which he did. The Letter was to inform the Brigadier that he had an Order for him from the British Court, desiring him to consider how he might get it safely., The Brigadier called a Council of the chief of the English Officers, who gave it as their opinion, that it was necessary to acquaint the General with it, being against the Rules of War, and very dangerous to receive Letters from the Enemy without communicating them to the Commander in chief: and Staremberg, when he was informed of the matter, said the Brigadier might send a Drummer to bring the Order, which accordingly was done. At the same time Staremberg fent an Account of the whole Affair to the Empress, who had not yet left Barcelona, and was much surprized that such an Order should be conveyed privately and even by the Enemy, while the British Minister, who resided with her, had not so much as mentioned it to her. Brigadier Price also went to Barcelona to confer with Admiral Fennings, who commanded the Fleet, and upon his return back again to the Army, he march'd his Troops towards the Sea-Coast, from whence they were transported to Port-Mahon.

AFTER this the Allies had no further Hopes of Assistance from the Queen of Great Britain, for the Lord Boling broke was all this time in France negociating matters privately at that Court, where he seem'd resolved to provide himself an Asylum in case of a Changeathome, by obliging the French in all things to the utmost of his power. But the Court of France having by these underhand dealings broken that Chain, which had kept the Allies united, and even in the strongest part of it, by dividing the two Maritime Powers, this made others begin to think before it was too late how they might best secure themselves: and first of all, the King of Portural, when he saw how things went, and that he was in a manner altogether abandoned by the Queen of Great Britain, and confidering the Hazard of his being swallowed up by the united Power of France and Spain, judged it his safest way also to declare a Suspension of Hostilities. And the Duke of Savey being in the like Circumstances, tho he did not so soon enter into a formal Treaty as the other, yet he was afraid to act any thing against an Enemy, who had in a manner got the Reins of Europe wholly into his hands, so that the War was also brought to a stand in Italy. And any one may casily imagine how the Empire and Holland were scituated in the midst of all these unhappy Conjunctures; but especially after the vast loss they had suftained this Year in the Field.

THIS being the unhappy State of Affairs among the Confederates abroad; the Miniftry at home made it their whole Business to The Mini. put the best colour on their own manage-for put the ment of things, that the Nation might not best Colons be alarmed, and from the ill State of the Confederates, portend new Dangers to Britain, which indeed many did; and therefore themselves and their Agents were very busy, infinuating into People's Minds that the Design of the Grand Alliance being to restore the Kingdom of Spain to the House of Auftria, and the chief Motive to this Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy being to preserve a Ballance of Power in Europe by preventing France and Spain from being united under one crown'd Head, they had established the faid Ballance on a much furer footing than if the Monarchy of Spain had been given to the House of Austria, and that was by obliging the King of Spain to make an abfolute Cession of his Right to the Kingdom of France, to go to the other Branches of the Bourbon Family, who were all to make the like Cession and Renunciation of their Right and Title to the Crown of Spain; and we were told that the Instruments were all drawn up and ready to be executed, which they had at last obtained with much difficulty. But this being nothing more than what the Queen mentioned in her Speech, to which, a number of the Peers had remonstrated, it gave no manner of satisfaction to the opposite Party, who looked on a Separate Peace with France to be altogether dangerous, because our Principal Ally the Dutch, were like to be disappointed in their Barrier, the Empire and the Countries of Savoy and Piedmont like to be expos'd to the continual Insults of France, and the King of Portugal to the united Power of France and Spain; all which had the worse Aspect, that no right Guaranty could be obtain'd to bind the French King, and his Grandson, to the fulfilling their Engagements without the concurrence of the Allies, whom the Britilb Ministers had abandoned by their carrying on separate Measures with the Enemy. But the Succession of the present Emperor after the Death of his Brother Foseph, above all things enabled the Ministry to consent to this Disposition of the Crown of Spain in the Person of Philip: because many who at the same time they dislik'd separate Negociations, were howevernot very fond of an Union between Spain and the Empire, there being no other Male Issue left of the Austrian Line, Several besides the said Charles. And it was still things conthe more easy for the Ministry to proceed in forward this manner, that the Emperor insisted obsti-their Denately to have the Monarchy of Spain resto-signs. red to him, which perhaps few of the other Allies

Allies would have consented to, had they continued united in all their Measures. this being the case, our Ministers caused a Copy of the Instrument of King Philip's Renunciation to be published, and the said Prince was advis'd to execute the same in the most publick and solemn manner before the Lord Lexington, who was fent to Spain on purpole as Ambassador from the Queen of Great Britain, and before the chief of the Spanish Grandees and the Cortez or States of the Kingdom, who were likewise called together on this extraordinary Occasion; to whom he declared, " That in regard of the " Efforts they had made to secure his Crown on two perilous Occasions, when it was " tottering, he therefore out of Gratitude " to procure Peace for his People, and st that he might never be separated from "them, had for himself and his Posterity " renounc'd all Claim to the Crown of " France." Several other Declarations of King Philip were also publish'd about the same time, and particularly one, wherein he expressed a great deal of Love to the Spanish Nation, viz. " That he would not exchange " that Kingdom for France, if it was left " to his Option, and that he acknowledged " he had every thing that any Man could " enjoy in being Sovereign of so many Do-" minions, but especially that he look'd on " it as his greatest Happiness, that Providence

"had placed him over so deserving a Peo"ple." And on the other hand, we had Inflances of the great Loyalty of the Spaniards rowards his Person and Government, and tho none were wont to be more zeasous
than the Spaniards to prevent a Coalition of the two Monarchies, yet it was given out that they had unanimonsly acknowledged themselves satisfy'd with the King, and could firmly rely on his Gracious Declaration.

THE Court-Party at home without much difficulty persuaded themselves into a belief of all these things, and into a good Opinion of this Disposition of the Spanish Mo-A great deal of pains was also tanarchy. ken, to make others believe it would be much better than if that Crown had been dispos'd any other Way; but the manner of carrying on this Affair rendered the whole very much suspected, it being evident beyond contradiction, that the Queen had concluded all things with France without the Participation of any of her Allies, tho no Publick Declaration thereof was made by her Ministers, who were not a little apprehensive lest they should disgust some of their own Party, if they should utterly abandon the Dutch, who would come into no Terms until they were secured in their Barrier, The Dutch which all thinking Men judged to be highly stand out reasonable, not only for the Safety of their Barrier. State, but of all Europe: and therefore our Ministers procured some Alterations to be made in that Part of the Plan, which related to the faid Barrier and the Barrier of the Empire, which was so essential a Point, that the Court of France was forced to consent to these Demands. After which the Earl of Strafford proposed to the States that they should have all their own Ministers demanded in the Year 1709, except Lifle, Maubeuge, and Conde, and the Tariff of the Year 1664, except for four Species of Merchandizes. That the Queen would make another Treaty for securing their Barrier, and the States on their part should continue to take on them to be, Guarantees of the Succession of the Crown of Great Britain in the Protestant Line of Hanover, as in the Treaty of Barrier already concluded with them. There was, besides these, another Article relating to the King of Pruffia's Interest in Guelder, besides some few Proposals, which the Dutch did nor altogether relish; however, the Assurances of a mutual Treaty of Guaranty were very acceptable to them, who weighing things according to their usual Prudence, judg'd it better to come into the Measures of Peace after this point gain'd, than to stand out against the united Power of France and Spain; and being no doubt in hopes that some more favourable Opportunity might offer hereafter of redressing their present Greivances, they thought it their Interest for the present to write write a Letter to the Queen, wherein they acquainted her with their Inclinations of concluding and figning a Peace jointly with her. And tho in this Letter they took the liberty to make some Observations on this new Plan, yet they did all this with abundance of Respect and Deserence, shewing They write themselves ready to submit to her Majesty's to the Wisdom, and offering with all Chearful—Queen. ness to put their whole Interest and Considence in her.

THIS Letter from the States-General was fent over about the latter end of December, when it was the proper time for them to determine fully what they were to do, and it was so acceptable to the Queen and her Ministers, that on the seventh of January fol- 1713. lowing, an Answer was return'd by an express, wherein the Queen declared her sincere Affection for their State, tho not without some Infinuations against her late Ministry, and The those who adhered to them, as if they were Queen's the only Persons, who had endeavoured to Answer. divide her Interests from theirs. However, she promis'd her Endeavours at this critical Juncture to knit faster (if possible) the Ties of this Union. And as she had ever in her Eve the Example and wife Conduct of that great Queen her Predecessor, who contributed so much to the support of their Commonwealth, when their brave Ancestors laid the first Foundation of it; so they might be . Q 3 per-persuaded she looked upon it as one of the greatest Glories of her Reign, that she had not only imitated, but even surpassed whatever that Queen had done, for the Establishment of their State, and the Encrease of their Power.

THE Union and good Understanding between Great Britain and Holland, was so manifestly essential to the Civil and Religious, Interests of both Nations, that in all Publick Transactions the Queen and her Ministry could never omit acknowledging the same, even when there was the greatest real Discord, as appeared manifest from her several Declarations and Speeches from the Throne; but this Declaration in a particular manner justify'd the Measures of the late Ministry, who were all along careful in maintaining this Union, at the same time it was a kind of Self-condemnation of the The Mini- Queen's present Ministers, who had given shemseives were for dissolving the same A. for the were for dissolving the same. As for the States General, tho they were not insensible that in these Assurances of the Queen, her Ministry seem'd to act contrary to their own Maxims, yet they took all without any Observation; and as the Queen had also in the same Letter recommended to them the settling of the Barrier Treaty, which had already been some time in Agitation, they applied themselves with so much earnestness, that all Differences relating thereunto, were COOD foon accommodated; so that it was happily concluded, and sign'd by the Plenipotentiaries of both Nations.

IN the mean time, the King of Prussia having obtain'd most of his Demands, his Minister signify'd his Master's Inclinations of concluding a Peace, whenever the Queen should think fit to finish her own; and the British Plenipotentiaries having been very strenuous in the Duke of Savoy's Interest, to procure for him the Kingdom of Sicily, the Ministers of that Prince had Instructions to return thanks to the said Plenipotentiaries for the great Care they had taken of their Master's Interest, tho it was impossible for him to maintain it without a Guaranty, in regard the Emperor and King of Spain had both of them an eye to it as their Right. About the same time the Treaty with Portugal was also finish'd; but the Emperor continged still obstinate in his Demands for the Restitution of Spain and the Indies, and for that Reason he made vigorous Preparations for another Campaign, tho none of the Al-Hes were so studious of his Interest, as to run any hazard themselves for it; and therefore he was obliged to stand wholly on his own bottom, having neither Ally nor Confederate to join with him, except some Princes of the Empire, who were obliged to be on their own Defence. However this total neglect of the Emperor's Interest was very much much blamed, because of the Protestants, who are pretty numerous in the Empire: for which reason many were of Opinion, that the Allies should not have concluded their Peace until they had at least provided the Empire with a sufficient Barrier, and in requital to have obtained good Terms for the Protestants in Germany; all which might have been done, had things been rightly managed in the Field, and that no separate Measures had been carry'd on with the Enemy. For it was the undoubted Interest of true Inte- Britain, in the first place to have got the reft of Bri-tain at this Power out of the hands of France, and being in conjunct Possession of most of the Barrier Places with the Dutch, these two Nations might have made their own Terms afterwards for the Protestants. But our Ministers were so far from taking these Matters into their Consideration, that it seems they thought but little about them, the Protestant Interest being not so much as mentioned in the Preliminaries, on which they treated; and we find all the Queen declared to the Parliament concerning it, when every thing else was in a manner concluded and agreed, " That France would make no "Objection against resertling it on the foot " of the Treaty of Westphalia." So that when the Dutch and other Protestant Ministers came to insist on having the fourth Aricle of the Treaty of Reswick altered,

viz. the Treaty between France and the Empire, wherein was stipulated, "That " the Roman Catholick Religion should " continue, as it was then exercised in Germany:" The French Ministers made Anfwer, that it belong'd to the Emperor and the Empire to redress those Grievances: but that Prince being disgusted, little could be expected from him; and the other Allies of Britain, who were Roman Catholicks, finding the Protestants had lost so much ground by the ill management of the Queen's Ministers, began to contemn this Nation now as much as they were wont at other times to court her Favour. As for the French King, notwithstanding the great Obligations he lay under to the Queen, but more especially to her Ministers, all that the British Plenipotentiaries and the other Protestant Ministers could obtain of him, was the releafing a very small number of his own Protestant Subjects from the Gallies, with a Promise that when he came to treat with the Emperor, he would out of Friendship for the Queen endeavour to procure that all things relating to Religion should be establish'd on the foot of the Treaty of Westphalia.

THE British Plenipotentiaries having now their full Instructions to sign their Treaties with France, obtained of the French King to admit by his Letters Patents the King of Spain's Renunciation of that Crown, and the Renunciations of the Dukes of Berry and Orleans of the Crown of Spain, after which they urg'd the Ministers of the other Allies very much to bring all their Affairs to a conclusion; for they were impatient lest any Accident should happen to hinder it, not only by reason of the great Opposition it met within England, but because none of the Allies were fully satisfy'd with their Conditions, if better could have been procured for them. And therefore on the fourth of April, the Queen's Plenipotentiaries signed their Treaties of Peace and Commerce with France, at The Peace the Bishop of Bristol's House about two in concluded. the Asternoon, and the Ministers of Savor, Portugal, Prussia, and the States-General sign'd theirs also at the same meeting, which continued sitting till near four next Morning; the Dutch Plenipotentiaries having several important Matters to adjust relating to their Barrier, which they were not willing to leave unfinished.

THUS were all the principal Matters concluded at Utrecht, tho no ways to the satisfaction of great numbers here in England, who when the Conditions stipulated in these Treaties came to be known, sound great fault with them, and in particular it was taken notice, that the Treaty between England and France was not very much different from the Treaty of Reswick, only that it was judg'd to be more desective in some things.

Laings. The chief Advantages gain'd by this I reaty, were such as the Queen and her Mi-The Terms misters could not avoid, if their Inclinations of Peace had flood another way, viz. to have the Great Bri-French King acknowledge the Succession in tain and the Protestant Line of Hanover, and to con-Cent to the Demolition of Dunkirk. As to the first, the French King if he had liv'd, might have perhaps kept his Engagements as he did to King William, whose Title he acknowledged in the Treaty of Reswick, and soon after permitted the Pretender to be proclaimed King of Great Britain at St. Germains. As to the latter, it was agreed that the Fortifications of that City should be razed, the Harbour fill'd up, and the Sluices, which ferved to cleanse the Harbours, to be level'd at the King's own expence within the space of 5 Months; viz. The Fortisications towards the Sea within the space of two Months, and those towards the Land with the Banks within three Months, on this express Condition, that they should never be repair'd: but the said Demolition was not to be begun till every thing was put into the French King's hands, which was to be given him as an Equivalent for the same. But in what manner the Court of France bubbl'd our Ministers in this Arricle, will be shewn hereafter.

BY the Treaty of Refwick, Restitution was made of all the Places in Hudson's Bay and

and the Island of Newfoundland, which had been taken on either sideduring the War. But by this Treaty, Hudson's Bay and Streights, with all the Lands, Coasts, Seas, and Rivers, Houses, Forts, &c. were to be yielded for ever to Great Britain, with the Cannon and a quantity of Ammunition proportionable to the Cannon-Ball that should be found in these Forts. And Commissaries were to be appointed on both sides to regulate the Limits between Hudson's Bay and the Places belonging to the French, and the King was to cause satisfaction to be given to the Hudson's Bay Company for the Damages they had sustained since a Cessation of Hostilities was proclaimed. On the other hand, the Queen was also to cause satisfaction to be given for the Damages the French had sustained at Monferat, and some other Grievances whereof the French complain'd, relating to the Capitulation in the Island of Nevis and the Castle of Gambia, &c. Great Britain was to have possession of Nova Scotia with its antient Boundaries, the Seas, and all other things belonging thereunto, as also all Newfoundland with the adjacent Islands; but the French were to have Liberty to erect Huts and Stages, and fuch other things as might be useful for the drying of Fish, on that Part which stretched all along from Cape Bonavista from the Northern Point of the faid Island, and from thence running down down by the West Side, as far as the place called Point Riche; and besides this Privilege, the Island called Cape Bretan, and all others in the Mouth of St. Laurence River and Bay of that Name, were hereaster to belong to the French, with full Liberty to raise Fortifications in the said Islands and Places.

THESE were the principal Matters concluded in the Treaty of Peace between this Nation and France, which upon first View had a tolerable good outside Appearance, particularly, that all Hudfon's Bar, with the Streights in the North-west Passage; were to be yielded up to Great Britain, some of these Places being then in the hands of the French; but when Péople begin to sonsider that they had Liberty to erect Huts in these Places, and to do every thing elfurfor cartying on their fishing Trade, and that Cape They cause Breton was made over to France with leave great Un to raise Fortifications there and in the other Islands in the Mouth of St. Laurence River. t created no small Uneafiness, because the French by having possession of Cape Breton ind the other Places abovementioned, would or enabled to make themselves Masters of all he Trade in those Parts, in case a fresh Rupure should happen between the two Naions.

BUT to make this go down the more moothly with the Court-Party, some of whom whom were also not a little fartl'd at these Stipulations, the Ministry and their Agent gave out, that for the Security of the Trade of the Nation, the Spaniards had consented to give up Gibraltar, Port-Mahon, with the whole Island of Minorca, to be garifon'd by English Soldiers. And to satisfy those, who had a Concern for the Protestant Intend they boaffed that they had obtained by the 21st Article of this Treaty, That his mot Christian Majesty should procure the Settle ment of Religion in Germany, according to the Treaty of Westphalia, as his Minister had promifed to the Queen's Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht; which however was looked on to be very abfurd in our Ministers, to last the Care of the Protestant Religion upon the

of the Pro- French King, who had driven all his own Protestant Subjects out of his Dominions, and had himself alter'd the State of Religion in all the Places which he had conquer'd; and therefore that any thing to the contrary would be contradicting all his former and present Maxims, which were suited to gratify the Court of Rome and the Bigots of Spain, that they might continue stedsast in his Grandson's Interest. Neither was the Article relating to Dunkirk much regarded, because the French King had consented to demolish it at his own Expence in the Year 1709, without demanding any Equivalent for it; but by this Treaty the City of Life, and and some other important Places in the Netherlands, were to be restored before any thing relating to the said Demolition was to be begun: so that there was no other Security for the French King's performing these Stipulations but his Bona Fide, which was worn threadbare and ridiculed and laugh'd at by all Nations after so many Infractions of Treaties.

BUT when the Treaty of Commerce The Nation with France came to be known, it brought alarm'd at the Nation into a new Ferment; there being of Comsome things in that Treaty judged very de merce with trimental to the Trade of this Nation; particularly the eighth and ninth Articles thereof: for in other Respects it was much the same with our former Engagements with that Nation, so that we shall not repeat the other Parts of it. Now it was provided by the eighth Article of this new Treaty of Commerce, that the Subjects of both Nations should trade on an equal footing, and by the ninth, that the Tariff of 1664 should not take place till 2 Months after a Law should pass in Great Britain to reduce the Duties on all French Commodities to an equality, for what was usually paid for Goods of the like nature, imported from any other Country of Europe. But it was the Opinion of our Merchants, and those who best understood Trade, that this would have quite destroy'd our Trade to Spain and Portugal, because neither neither of these two Nations could receive the Commodities of Britain, but in exchange for their Wines; and the Duties payable in France on the British Commodities, especially for Fish, Sugar, and woollen Manusactures of all Sorts, which generally go off in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, were to continue so high, that there was no likelihood of vending them in France, but at a very great loss; whereas there was no prohibition on the English Wool, nor upon dying Drugs, or any thing else that could promote the Manusacturing of Cloaths in France.

THE lowering the Duties on French Wines imported to Britain to the same Rates of Wines from other Countries. would have met with no small Encouragement, because the Contiguity of England and France would have made the French Wines come much cheaper than those of any other Country; and the agreeable Taste and Flavour of the French Wines, would have been such an Encouragement to the importation of them, that few or none of any other kind would have been brought into the Kingdom. And as the Nation by this means would have flood in no need of the Portuguese and Spanish Wines, the Proprietors of the Wool must have sold that Commodity to France, fince there would have been but little Encouragement to use it at home.

home. And such vast Quantities of Brandy must have also been imported, as would have quite ruined the advantageous distilling of Malt, Molosses, and some other things, which if it was not for the distilling Trade would be altogether useless.

THE Fish which the British Merchants bring every Year in great Quantities from Newfoundland, and other Parts of North-America, could not have gone off in Spain and Portugal for the same Reason, viz. because Great Britain could not take any Quantity of their Wines in Exchange. Neither could they have been sold in France, not only by reason of the high Duties laid on most kinds of Fish imported into France, but also as the French had now the liberty of catching as many Fish as they pleased, and of curing them in the most commodious Places of the British Plantations: so this Branch of the British Trade, notwithstanding it had brought fuch vast Riches into the Kingdom, must in a manner have been quite lost to Britain, since the exchanging these Commodities, as well as the Native Manufactures of this Kingdom, for Wines, was the greatest Encouragement to the Spaniards and Portuguese, not only to deal with Britain in those things, but also to the Italians, and other Nations, which supply Britain both with their Wines, Oil, Fruits. and raw Silks, which of late Years have very very much promoted the Manufactures of this Kingdom.

THIS our Merchants judg'd, must have been an unspeakable loss, seing the Trade of Great Britain for Wines, was soacceptable to the Portuguefe and other distant Nations, that in the Ballance of so great a Trade, vast Sums of Money in Specie were every Year returned into Britain; whereas, if the Spaniards and Portuguese had been forced to pay Money for the same Commodities, which they were accustomed to have in exchange for theirs, which must have happen'd, had this Treaty taken effect, they would have received few or none of them from Britain, because they would have had them much cheaper from France. And as this must have also been a loss to the Portuguese in regard the French stand in no need of their Wines; therefore the French, that they might make the Ballance of Trade more easy to Portugal, and more advantageous to themselves, were going to enter into a Treaty with Portugal, to take off their Sugars and dying Drugs: and to favour this, they had continued the high Duty on English Sugars, and other Commodities of Great Britain.

UPON the whole, this Treaty was thought to be very pernicious to the Nation, as it would have ruined her Factories, at the same time that it must have encouraged those of France, whereby Marseilles and other Cities on the Mediterranean Coast of France, by reason of their commodious Scituation. would have imported from Italy, Oil in abundance for their woollen Manufactures; and as they could have also supply'd these Countries with Fish after that Trade had been lost to Great Britain, they would by that means have ingroffed to themselves all their raw Silks, and might in all probability have carried from this Nation their Turkey and Levant Trade; and the Artificers of the same things in Britain, must have been reduced to Beggary, become a Burden to the Publick, and the whole. Nation impoverished, by being deprived of the most valuable Branches of her Trade. But besides, such a Treaty would have ruined the Navigation of this King-For the Maritime Power of France dom. was but of small account, (even so late as the Siege of Rochelle) until they found a way into the North Parts of America; but after they had by the Negligence and ill Management of some of our Great Men during the Reign of King Charles the Second, made themselves Masters of some large Territories and Settlements there; their Power at Sea increased to a very amazing degree, in so much, that they have since then, thrice esfav'd to dispute the Mastership of the Seas with the combined Fleets of Great Britain and P 2 and Holland. But if this Treaty had taken place, they might have soon been enabled to engross the whole fishing Trade, which has been so beneficial to Britain. and the Subjects of this Kingdom settled in the North Parts of America, must have only become Servants to them: and the Ships of Burden, which employ so many hands in their Voyages from hence to Newfoundland, and from thence to Spain, Portugal, Italy, and the Levant, which at the same time they bring home great Riches to Britain, and are also a constant Nursery for Seamen, to supply the Royal Navy upon every Emergency, must have been laid up for want of Employment, while the Trade between Great Britain and France would have been carried on with Barks and other Vessels of the smallest Burden.

The New Treaties laid before the House of Commons.

THE Affairs of Commerce being settled under all these apparent Disadvantages, imployed most Peoples Thoughts; and so much was objected against this Treaty by those, who had got Intimation of the Conditions of it, that the Queen could not help laying it and the other Treaties before the House of Commons, tho it was delayed till towards the latter end of the Session, when the Members are generally in a hurry to dispatch Business, that they may go into the Country. And a Motion being made for a Bill to make good the eighth and ninth Articles of the Treaty of Commerce, which were the most obnoxious to the Trading Part of the Nation, and the most found fault with by some of the Members, it was carried by a very great Majority, notwithstanding many excellent Speeches were made to show the ill Consequences that must attend this Bill if it should pass: but the Members, who voted for this Bill, were most of them unacquainted with the Affairs of Commerce, and some mischievous Engines had very artfully made a Distinction between the Landed and Trading Interest of the Nation, in which they were encouraged by the Ministry; whereby they prepossessed abundance of well meaning Country Gentlemen, with a very abfurd Notion of maintaining a Ballance, that they might not be overpower'd and run down by the money'd Men, and they were taught to believe they had been in great neglect fince the Trading Part of the Nation had intrusted so much of their Money in the Publick: which stirred up Envy in the Country Gentlemen, and rendered many of them too careless and indifferent about the publick Credit, and the Trade of the Nation; tho nothing could be of more fatal Consequence, than such a Distinction, seeing the Increase of Riches always increases the Value of Land, which is very manifest in Holland, Venice, and other Trading Nations, and was plainly demonstrable

by the late extravagant Rise of the South-Sea; which, had the Advantages of it been real, would have doubled the Value of Land in all parts of the Kingdom.

BUT before this Bill could pass, Petitions were sent from all the Trading Towns in the Kingdom, and from most of the Trading Companies of the City of London against it; and among others, the East-India Company had also drawn up a Representation to shaw that the mantioning so

France, without taking notice of those of Foreign Growth to be imported by British Merchants, was an Omission that might prove detrimental to their Trade. But the Commons, to prevent the Clamours that might be rais'd from their petitioning, thought fit, of their own accord, to have that part of the Article more fully explain'd; which in some measure satisfy'd the East-India Com-But the Merchants who trade to pany. Turkey could not be so easily put off, being very earnest to have their Reasons against this Bill made known to the whole House; fome Turkey Merchants were therefore called in, and examined, with some others who were concerned in the Newfoundland and Mediterranean Trade: who made it appear, by many invincible Reasons, that to the this Treaty would be pernicious Trade, Trade, and ruin the Manufactures of Great Britain. However, the Court-Party endeavoured to extenuate things as much as possible, especially Mr. Moore, and some others of the Commissioners of Trade, who probably had been consulted in it, and therefore pleaded still to have it pass with some Amendments. But the opposing Members getting ground of the Court-Party, and having also made themselves more ripe for the Debate by the Light the Merchants had given them, insisted strenuously that it might be rejected. And General Stanhope in particular took notice of the great Loss the Nation had sustain'd by the - favour had been shewn to France in King Charles the Second's time, by fuffering the Subjects of that Nation to trade with the Northern Plantations of America, and by encouraging them to improve their own Woollen Manufacturies, to the great detriment of the Manufactures of this Kingdom. He also mentioned an Act of Parliament made in the 30th Year of that King's Reign. by the Preamble of which it appeared, that it was the Sense of the then House of Commons. " That the Nation had by long Ex The Opireperience found, that the importing of nion of French Wines, Brandy, Linen, Silks, former Salt and Paper, and other Commodities ments conof the Growth and Product of the Ter-cerning our Trade with c ritories of France, had much exhausted France.

" the Treasure of England, lessened the ve Value of the Native Manufactures and " Commodities thereof, and caused great " detriment to the Kingdom in general." Wherefore they then made the said Act, to put some stop to the Importation of these Commodities. But the Court-Party were unwilling to believe that this had been the Sense of former Parliaments, and that they had been forced to restrain Commerce with France upon such weighty Considerations. And therefore Mr. Bromley the Speaker would have fain persuaded the House, that Mr. Stanhope was under a mistake, and that no such Act had ever been made: but Mr. Stanhope infifting to have that A& looked into, the Clerk was ordered to fearch the Books, and to read it; whereby it appear'd that the Mistake lay on Mr. Bromley's side. Some Members having upon this animad-verted very severely on the Speaker, the Debate was therefore put off; and the next day most of the Members on both sides were willing the other Merchants, who had petition'd, but had not been examin'd, should be called in, to hear their Reasons against an open Trade with France. Mr. Torriano spoke in behalf of the Spanish Trade, and made several sharp Animadversions on the 8th and 9th Articles of this Treaty, and mentioned the 10th and 11th, as relating to the two former, in such a manner, as gave offence offence to some Court-Members, who moved that the House should order him to be taken into custody. But Mr. Stanhope, Several Mr. Lechmere, Sir Peter King, Mr. Wal Members pole, and some others, pleaded in his behalf, the Trade and faid, that unless they allowed the Mer- of the Nachants full Liberty to declare their Sentiments, it would be impossible for the House to form a right Judgment of the Affair; and particularly they insisted, that no man ought to suffer for standing up for the Trade of the Nation. This, with a noble Spirit that appeared in behalf of the Merchants, made the Courtiers drop their present Refentment: for not a few of those who had gone great lengths with the Court, and had even voted to bring in the Bill that was then in Debate, began to change their Sentiments, when they heard what the Merchants had to say against it; and the greatest part of the Members being now willing to get as much light as possible in this matter. obtain'd leave for the other Merchants to declare their Opinions: and accordingly Mr. Wyat was permitted to speak in behalf of the Italian Trade, Mr. Milner for the Portugal Trade, and Colonel Lekeux for the Weavers.

WHEN the Merchants were withdrawn, fome Papers were also laid before the House; particularly a Scheme of Trade between England and France in the Year 1674, which which put the matter beyond all debate. However, the Court-Party were willing to try the utmost, and having made some Amendments to the Bill, it was offered again to the House by Sir Robert Davers, the next day being the 18th of June, and a Motion was made that it should be engrossed, Arthur Moore, who was generally believed to be the Person chiefly employ'd in forming that Treaty, was now the chief Advocate for it, and would fain have persuaded the House that it was a good one. But this Person being like to spend a great deal of time to little purpose, Sir Thomas Hanmer stood up, and made a very honest and ingenuous Speech against it: That Gentlemen among other things said, " That before he mas Han- " had examined the Affair in question to " the bottom, he gave his Vote for bring-" ing in the Bill to make the 8th and 9th " Articles of the Treaty of Commerce ef-" fectual; but that having afterwards ma" turely weigh'd and confidered the Alle-" gations of the Merchants, Traders, and " Manufacturers in their feveral Petitions " and Representations, he was persuaded "that the passing this Bill, would be of great Prejudice to the Woollen and Silk " Manufactures of the Kingdom, and con-" fequently increase the number of the Poor,

" and so in the end affect the Land.

" while he had the honour to fit in that " House,

House, he would never be blindly led by any Ministry, neither on the one hand was he biass'd by such Motives as might weigh with some Men, viz. the fear of losing their Elections; but that the Principles upon which he acted, were the Interest of his Country and the Conviction of his " Judgement, and upon these two Considerations alone, he was against the Bill." This Speech coming from one, who was known to have a very great regard for the Queen, a Lover of the establish'd Church, and a Man of Character, had so great an Influence, that the Bill was rejected, tho only The Bill of by a Majority of nine Voices: for some, who Commerce could say nothing in behalf of the Bill, yet France being under the Direction of the Ministry, cast out. continued stedfast to their Party, and voted for it.

WHILE this Affair was in agitation, another Bill was also depending in Parliament concerning the Malt-Tax, which was proposed to extend to North-Britain, in regard the Parliament of Great Britain was by the 14th Article of the Treaty of Union at liberty after the War, to augment the Malt-Tax in Scotland, as they should see convenient. And in this Bill, it was ordain'd that the Scots Malt should pay an equal Duty with the English Malt: for notwithstanding all the Subsidies, which had been raised during the two preceeding Years, which was computed at no less than 14 Millions sterl. yet the Treasury was empty, and all Payments greatly in Arrear, so that our Ministers were ready to catch at every opportunity, to raise Money: which was indeed very furprizing, because by this time, the greatest Part of the Army was disbanded, and most of the Ships of War were laid up or fold. But the Scots looked on this Tax to be a very great Hardship, in regard a Bushel of English Malt is generally worth two or three Bushels of the Scots, and therefore the Scots Members oppos'd it with all their Might in the House of Commons; but finding their Endeavours prove unsuccessful there, they held divers Conferences with their own Peers, and Deputations were also sent from Scotland, to urge their Representatives to prevent so great a Burden fall-ing upon their Country. Whereupon, some of the chief of the Scots Nation waited on , the Queen, and acquainted her, That so heavy a Tax, and some other Infractions of the Union, had rais'd the Discontents to that degree in Scotland, as would oblige them to declare the Union dissolv'd, unless they were temps to remedy'd. The Queen was somewhat surprized, and said, she wish'd they might not have cause to repent their precipitant Resolution: however she promis'd her Endeavours to make them easy. But when this the Scots Lords persisted unanimously in their Desire of having the Union dissolv'd, and were back'd by several of the English Nobility, especially by those, who had the greatest share in making the Union, provided the Scots would continue the Succession fion of their Crown on the House of Hanover, as they had already engaged by the Union Act. These Lords came the more readily into the Scheme, because they were sufficiently apprehensive how much the Succesfion was in danger from all the Steps the Ministry had taken; for it was plain and obvious, that the Ministry had given all possible Encouragement to the Disaffection that appeared so universal throughout the Kingdom, by doing It is owing every thing to weaken the Hands of those, to the ill who were the greatest Friends to that Suc-Conduct of the Minicession. And by their bad Management of fire. the Peace, had divided the Allies, expos'd the Empire without a Barrier to be over-run with the united Power of France and Spain, and all Europe to a fresh War upon a very disadvantageous footing: they had expos'd some of our best Plantations to the Insults of France, and had given up the Trade of Great Britain to be ruined and undone by her; and in fine, had reduced themselves to this pass, that it was even to be apprehended they could have no way at last left to skreen them from the just Resentment of their Countrymen, but by altering the Succession, and casting sting themselves wholly under the Protection of the French King, whose Interest it was to promote that Revolution as the most sure way to recover his Affairs. Therefore the great Men, who fided with the Scots, were of opinion, if the Scots would by a new Act secure the Succession in the House of Hanover, it might be of greater Advantage as a separate Kingdom, considering the Danger they justly apprehended from the ill Scituation of Affairs, than if the Scots continued united with England; because they were sure of those, who were of the established Religion of Scotland, to stand by that Succession, and in case any Attempt should be made to alter it, Scotland would be a Sanctuary to all fuch Persons as might fly thither for their Adherence to the said Succession. This was a reasonable Motive to induce those great Men, who oppos'd the Court Measures, to plead for having the Union diffolv'd, besides that so high a Tax on Malt, was judged to be a great Hardship on the Poor of Scotland, who have but small Wages, and could not be able to refresh themselves out of their Day-Labour with a Draught of Malt Liquour, if the Price should be heightned. Howbeit the Court-Party went on with this Act, notwithstanding the Opposition that was made to it. But the Scots having laid aside all their other Differences, and the Majority of the People in NorthNorth-Britain being also ready to confirm the Succession in the House of Hanover, as already established by the Union Act; the Courtiers were not only disappointed thereby, but very much alarm'd, because they knew the Scots would by that means, draw to themselves a very powerful Party in England, whereby they might either procure the Union to be dissolved, or if that could not be done, would at least have the effect to weaken their Interest, which in the end might have been of ill consequence to their Designs; therefore the Courtiers judged it the safest way to defist: and tho the Malt-Act was finished, yet Assurances were given to the Scots, that it should not be put in execution; which intirely dissolved this new Conjunction, which had like to have been form'd between the Scots and those who opposed the Court-Measures in England.

ABOUT the same time, a Bill was A Bill for brought into the House of Lords for an a Tolera-Act of Toleration for those who were of Scotland. The Episcopal Persuasion in Scotland, that they should have the free Exercise of their Religion in the same manner as the Dissenters in England. This indeed, to all outward appearance, seem'd reasonable; but as it was managed, it had like to have been the Cause of much Consusion. Hitherto there had been no Law put in execution against the Episcopal Meetings in Scotland, except where the Ministers refused to pray for the Queen; which also was frequently ovar look'd, so that there was no great necessity for such a Toleration. But most of the Episcopal Ministers who held these Congregations being Nonjurors, and for that reason liable to be disturb'd by the Laws that were in force, obliging them to take the Oath of Allegiance, which was all that was before this required in Scotland; therefore the Friends of these Nonjuring Clergymen procured the Oath of Abjuration to be inserted in this Bill, and enjoin'd to be taken by all Ministers, as well those of the Established Religion of Scotland, as by the Ministers of the Episcopal Persuasion. some of the Scottish Members, and others who opposed the Court-Measures, seeing clearly into the true Design of this Bill, infifted upon the undoubted Principles of the Established Ministers towards the Protestant Succession, and therefore that the Abjuration-Oath needed not to be tendered to them. But the Court-Party knowing very well that it would create some disturbance among the Established Ministers, and that fome of them would refuse to take it without an Explanation, argu'd the more firenuously to have it extend to both, that by granting an Indulgence to such Presbyterian

Nonjurors, the same might also be allow'd to the Episcopal

copal Nonjurors; which they carried by a confiderable Majority, notwithstanding some of the Scottish Representatives laid the whole Matter and Design of the Courtiers, open to both Houses.

NOW this Act was like a Watch-word to the Nonjurors in both Kingdoms, who began by it and the other Proceedings of the Court, to gather great Strength, and were fo much conniv'd at by some Men in Power, The Facon and had such Encouragement from others, bite Party that they openly and avowedly declared their grow info-Sentiments with Impunity. If any com-this AA. plained of them, the Justices, who were for the most part Creatures of the Court, put off these Complaints as the effect of Malice, and in some of the publick Addresses that were sent to the Queen in approbation of the Peace, no mention was made of the Succession in the House of Hanover, and in one of these, it may be well remember'd, the Addressers expressed themselves in a very odd manner concerning the Succession, viz. That they could not be affured whether they would be look'd upon as loyal Subjects, if they presum'd to meddle with a Point, the Determination of which they took to be undoubtedly in the Queen. Others were yet more plain in favour of the Pretender; notwithstanding which, these Addresses were all graciously receiv'd, and the Persons, who presented them, introduced to the Queen with more than ordinary Notice. But .

But when these Addresses came to be printed by publick Authority, People were not a little aftonished, fome at the Freedom the great Men had taken in introducing these Persons, and afterwards printing their Addresses; which so plainly levell'd at the Constitution and Protestant Succession, while others were alarm'd at the Dangers, which feem'd by this audacious Conduct, to be nearer at hand than any one had imagined. And the immediate effect these things had on the Publick, was, that those, who appeared under any deep concern for the Interest of the House of Hanover, were exposed to be infulted, while the Pretender's Cause was openly espous'd, and his Health drank in many giddy Cabals and Meetings throughout the Kingdom.

BUT this was so far from doing the Ministry any real Service, that it proved a stumbling Block to several Members of both Houses, who at the same time they had a very great Veneration for the Queen, did not however like to see things carried to so dangerous a pass. Some of the Ministers themselves, particularly the Lord Chancellor Harcourt, and the Lord Treasurer, were not a little dissatisfy'd at Bolingbroke's Rashness and ill Conduct, he having the chief hand in introducing the Patrons of these Addresses to the Queen, who perhaps did not see into their Consequences; for she was blinded with the egregious Flatteries, that were continually stuff'd into these Addresses; which, however, had this essect, that the opposite Party took the Opportunity from these forward Steps in Bolingbroke and his Friends, to importune the Queen and her Ministers daily, until they obtained surther Promises of Security for the Protestant Succession: besides that, the honest Men of both Parties were inclinable after this, to look more narrowly into the present State of Affairs.

THE Equivalent for Dunkirk, had given no small Jealousy, that there might be a considerable Sum of Money paid for it; because notwithstanding the vast Subsidies, that were raised for this, and the preceeding Years, the Guards and Garrisons, the Queen's Honschold, Chelsea Collede, and almost all, who receiv'd Pay or Salaries, were very much in arrear; and yet it was at the same cime given out, that the Civil List was much incumbered, and that the Funds would prove very deficient. The Proceedings relating to the Scots Malt-Tax, were also looked on as what plainly intimated the necessity of the State, confidering how unfeafonably it was importuned, and with so much hazard to the Ministry: and therefore an Address was procured in the House of Commons without much Opposition, to know of the Queen, what Equivalent was to be given for Dunkirk.

Dunkirk. This put the Court somewhat to dress of the a stand, because Lille, and some other For-House of Commons Dunkirk.

treffes in the Netherlands, had been made concerning over to France, both in the Treaty of Peace with that Nation, and in the Barrier-Treaty, in both which, the faid Places were mentioned as the Equivalent for Dunkirk; and probably they did not expect any further enquiry would be made about it: and it was so long after presenting this Address before the House of Commons had an Answer, that they almost gave over all expectation of it. But the Ministry having at last recovered out of their Surprize, and very probably thinking it might be the means to increase Proples Jealousies, that Money had been given to France, as well as the Places abovementioned, if no Answer should be made to this Address: Therefore an Answer was prepared and reported in the Queen's Name by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, viz. "That in "pursuance of the Treaty of Peace with " France, and the Barrier-Treaty with the " States-General, the Equivalent which was " to be given for the Demolition of Dun-" kirk, was already in the French King's " hands;" which being read in a full House, gave but little satisfaction.

ABOUT the same time, another Mesfage was sent in the Queen's Name, to recommend the Debts of the Civil-List to the House of Commons: That they would im-

power her to raise such a Sum of Money as might enable her to discharge the Debts thereof, and settle the Expence to be regularly paid for the future. When the Estimate was read, Mr. Smith, who had been Spea-The Debes ker of the House of Commons formerly, and of the Civil List One of the Tellers of the Exchequer, object-much ened very much against it, averring, that to his creas'd. certain Knowledge, the Debts of the Civil-List in the Month of August, 1710, did not amount to above a Hundred and Fifty Thoufand Pounds, for the Payment of part of which Sum, there was Money standing out, besides great Quantities of Tin; whereas, by the Estimate now laid before the Commons, the said Debts to Midsummer 1710, were made to amount to above four Hundred Thoufand Pounds. Upon this, it was moved to address the Queen, that she would cause an Account to be laid before the House of the Arrears of the Civil-Lift Funds standing out at Midlummer 1710, and also an Account of the Debts of the Civil-List, as they stood at this time, and of the Arrears of the Civil-Lift Funds to pay the same. The Persons. who had been concerned in the Management of the Revenue in the time of the late. Ministry, when these Debts were first contracted, being so forward to have their Transactions laid to open View; it was believed the Majority would have seconded that Motion, not only from what was observable, when  $Q_3$ when they cast out the Bill of Commerce, but as many of the Court-Members seem'd to have some Jealousy in the Assair of Dunkirk: but it happen'd quite otherwise, for they rejected that Motion, and order'd the Sum of 5000001. of the Revenues appointed to the Uses of the Civil Government, to be apply'd to clear the Debts of the Civil-List. And tho this indeed very much strengthened the hands of the Ministry to go through with their Designs, yet it was believed, some of the Members had their own Interest concerned in this Vote, as it enabled the Ministers to require their Favours, especially, that it was the last Session, and drawing towards the time of a new Election.

THE Treaties of Peace and Commerce with France having met with so much Oppotion, and the Queen being to nearly concern'd in this matter, Sir Thomas Hanner, 25 he had been a great Instrument in casting out the Bill of Commerce, to when there other Affairs were over, out of Respect and Duty to her, made a motion for an Address "Proposing the humble Thanks of the " House for the great Care her Majesty had " taken for the Security and Honour of her " Kingdoms in the Treaty of Peace, sind al if io what the had done in the Treaty of " Commerce with France, by laying to good a Foundation for the Interest of her People in Trade. And humbly to delire " her her Majesty that she would be pleased to appoint Commissaries to treat with Commissaries on the part of France, for ad-46 justing such Matters as should be necessa-< ç ry to be settled in the Treaty of Com-68 " merce between her Majesty and France; that the Treaty might be so explain'd and 66 46 perfected, that an intire Scheme of Trade might be settled, for the making effectual 46 her Majesty's gracious Intentions for the "Good and Welfare of her People." Thomas Hanmer no doubt looked upon this as the most dutiful and becoming way of adviling the Queen, to rectify what was amiss in the Treaty of Commerce.

NEVERTHELESS some Members spoke against the first Part of this Address. because by the Treaty of Commerce, Great Britain was only to have the Liberty to trade to three Ports of France with her Woollen Manufactures, viz. St. Valeroy, Rosn, and Bourdeaux, which the French had obtain'd with this view, that being afterwards transported by Land, or by the French Subjects by Sea, they might be rendered so dear, as to discourage their Importation wholly. And therefore, after the Committee was appointed for drawing up the Address, Gen. Stanhepe moved, " That " it should be an Instruction to the said Committee, to represent it as the Sense of the "House, That the Commissaries, who Q 4

" were so treat of the Commerce with " France, thould infift, that Liberry might " be given to the Brital Sublection wo Heade 's to all the Ports in the Frencho Ring's Do-A Motion minions without Restriction." But whis, in behalf of to the great Surprize of the Trading Part of Traderejected by the Nation, was rejected; and the Queun, in the House Answer to the Address of the House of of Com. mons. Commons upon Sir Thomas Hunner's Motion, after her thanks for their ApproBation of her Treaties, faid, "It was with no famil " difficulty, than to great Advantages in " Trade were obtain d for hep bubious - and " that she would readily comply win Etheir " Desires in continuing her unnoft Cate for fecuring the Benefits, she had hipulated for the Peoples" of the bear and the second of the second o " her People." BUT this was such an open and barefae'd Abuse of the Queen, Miterfier Arms lial reduc'd France to the greatest extremity; that many confiderable Persons in both Houses and without doors, could not refrain caking morice how gross this Conduct was in those, who had advised the Answer, and were not a little altonish'd, that any body constitutink it foch an one, as might fatisfy a Nation, whose Happiness consisted so much in her Trade. Others were under the deepest concerns because they could not, after the Queen had made such a publick Declaration, that the Terms were advantageous, and that the had therefore obtained them with much difficulty, expect any redress; but on the contrary, that France would encroach still further on the Trade of Britain, upon so naked and open a Confession from the Throne, of the Queen's Imporency. And indeed things had but a dull Aspect every way; for the French were gaining confiderable Advantages in Germamy, having taken Friburg, Landan, and other Fottresses on the Rhine; which were the flrongest Bulwarks of the Empire. At the same time the Peace between the States. General and the Crown of Spain, was not like to come to any conclusion, nor were the Treames between that Crown and Great Britain Anish'd; not withstanding Philip was put in full policilion of that Monarchy. Mean while, there was so good a Harmonybetween the Courts of Britain, France. and Spain, that nothing was talk'd of, but Prefents and Compliments. Our Courners regal'd'themselves with French Wines, and our best breeding Mares were sent to France: the Duke d'Aumont, who came over about this time Ambassador from the Prench King, was very much carefed at Court, and the Popish Priests, both Natives and Foreigners, Awarm'd from all' Parts to London, and appear'd publickly without any notice taken by the Magistrates. other things daily happen'd, that look'd with so bad an Aspect, that those, who wish'd the real Welfare of their Country, could not avoid running running the hazard of the Queen's displeasuf in the freedom they took with her Minister-For besides all other Grievances, the Pretender had taken up his Residence in Lorrain, where he was at hand on any Emergency, that might offer to his advantage; being recommended to the Duke of Lorrain's Protection by the French King; who, it seems, had procured the Queen's Warrant for that purpole But this was such an Affront as could not be overlook'd, and therefore the Earl of What. ton complained of it to the House of Lords, where, after some sharp Satire against the Ministry, he moved, that an Address should be presented to the Queen, " To me ha utmost Endeavours with the Duke of Lat-" rain, and with all other Princes and Suns " in Amity with her, that they would not " receive, or fuffer the Bretender to bu "Crown to continue in any Part of their " Dominions" This Address was so resto nable, that no body opposed it but the Lord North and Grey, who after starting loss Difficultys on the Queen's part, asked, where they would have that Person to reside since mest, if not all the Powers of Europe, were in Amity with the Queen? To this, the Earl of Peterbarough made Answer, "That as he began his Studies at Peris, the fit " test Place for him to improve himself, The fame Motion was also " was Rome." made in the House of Commons, where no body oppos'd it, only Sir William Whitlock said, he remembred, that the like Address had been made to Oliver Cromwel for having Charles Stuart removed out of France. norwithstanding which, he was some time How- Both Howafter restored to his Father's Throne. ever both the Addresses were voted, and ses address presented to the Queen: and the none the Queen of the Members in either House could for his reavoid joining in this Request without incurring the blame of favouring the Pretender's Interest, yet it seems her Ministers were distatisfy'd with it; for in her Answer to the Commons, she said bluntly, she would comply with what they requested of her: for the Court always made it their Study, that the Queen should do nothing to disoblige that House, especially, that their chief dependance was in them, and they began now to lose some ground in the House of Lords. And therefore in her Answer to the Lords, the Sentiments of her Ministry were declared with more Freedom, for in it she said, if the Animosties at home could be cured, that would be the only means to fecare the Protestant Succession: whereby the The Oneen plainly shew'd her dislike to the Addresses of dislikes this both Houses, but thought fit only to express Address. her Resentment in her Answer to the Lords.

ALL this while most of the Inferiour Clergy continued in the Court Interest, and therefore could not accord very well with the Bishops, some of whom did by no means relish the the publick Proceedings: for when it was a pected that the Convocation should according to Custom address the Queen upon account of the Peace; the lower House refus'd to join with the Bishops in an Address the Bifhops had prepared, alledging they had not expressed a sufficient thankfulness for the Peace, nor that Confidence in the Queen, which they ought to have done. shops were so sensible of the Weakness and she Bishops Insufficiency of the Treaties her Ministers and the in- had made, that they could not in Conscience express themselves otherwise than in a way that shewed both their doubtfulness and concern for the ill State of the publick Affair. But the lower House having upon this drawn up a separate Address of their own, presented it to the Queen, without the concurrence of the Bishops, and without the Consent of feveral Members of their own House, who entered their Protest against it: to which the Queen gave a very favourable Anfwer, the some Years before, when the like Disagréement happen'd between the two Houses of Convocation, the Queen refufed a separate Address from the lower House, and term'd it a manifest Act of Disobedience in the Inferiour Clergy, and an Infringement on the establish'd Constitution of the Church of England. this Act of Disobedience caused the Bishops to make several Resolves against the lower House,

House, so it was the Occasion of violent Disputes among the Laity, of whom, many at this time, were more inclinable to favour the Proceedings of the lower House, than the Bishops; but especially that the Queen had approved the Condust of the lower House, and given a Sanstion to their Contumacy.

AFTER all these Disputes, both in the Parliament and Convocation; and the Summer being also pretty far advanc'd, the Queen came to the House, and put an end to this Parliament; which had now continued their Term of three Years, having first made a Speech, wherein among other things, " She expressed her utmost satisfaction, par-" ticularly in the Zeal and Affection of the " House of Commons, and said, she doubt-" ed not at the next Meeting, the Affair of " Commerce would be so understood, that " the advantageous Conditions she had ob-" tain'd from France, would be made effec-" tual for the Benefit of the British Trade. " and that the hoped to meet her Parlia-" ment next Winter resolved to act on the " fame Principles, and with such Vigour, A frange " as should enable her to support the Liber-Expression in the "ties of Europe abroad, and reduce the Queen's "Spirit of Faction at home." For so the Speech. Persons, who advis'd the Queen in making this Speech, were pleas'd to term that noble Zeal, which appeared in those, who stood up for the Liberties of their Country, the Protestant Succession, and the Trak of the Nation.

BUT no sooner was the Parliament disfolved, and the Members gone to their Country Sears, when the Ministey counive at some things, which encouraged the Pretender's Friends very much; particularly in allowing the Magistrates of Dunkirk to prefent an Address to the Queen, and afterwards a Memorial, to fave the Harbour and fome of the Fortifications of that Place, on a Pretence, that the filling up the Harbour would not only ruin that Town, but lay a good part of the Country under Water. And the fome of the Court Agents pleaded for this as an Act of Mercy to the Inhabitants, and pretended it would be no damage to England, provided the chief Fortifications were razed; yet it made so great a Noise, that the Court was obliged to infift on the Demotition of the Works, and filling up the Harbour: for if this Request of the Magistrates of Dunkirk had been granted, the Ministry found they must thereby have lost many of their Friends, who were not so closely attach'd to them, as to connive at an Evafion in a matter of fo great Importance to the Nation. However, the Temper of the Court was so well known by the Queen's Speech, and the subsequent Transactions of the Ministry, especially in that rclarelating to Dunkirk; (which the Nonjurors interpreted as a Design to favour a future Invalion from thence in behalf of the Pretender,) that several Addresses were drawn up by disaffected Persons in divers Parts of the Kingdom, full of Ambiguity concerning Ambiguthe Succession to the Crown, and some of ses concernthem were conceiv'd as much in the Preten-ing the Sucder's favour, as they could well be, without coffien. mentioning him by Name; and all this to make the Nation and the whole World believe, that these were the true Sentiments of the People. Some of these Addresses came from North Britain, where the Disaffected to the Protestant Succession, were, by reason of their Distance from the Seats of Justice, and the Insufficiency of some Laws more open and barefac'd than they durst venture to be in other Parts of the Kingdom. And such was the Insolence of the Papists in Scotland, especially in the North and other remote Parts, that they fet up several Mass-Houses, whereunto People frequented as publickly as to the Parish Churches, and even many Protestants were grown so sanguine in the Pretender's Cause, that they gave out in all Places as a piece of News, that the Pretender was about to embrace the Protestant Religion; and that Lesley, his Chaplain, performed Divine Service every day, whereunto they said the Pretender gave constant Attendance. Besides this, many excellent Characters racters weredrawn, to fer him off both in his Person and Qualities, and Pictures said to be his, were handed about and very much idolized both here and in Scotland, by fuch as were fond of Novelties. And the Scots being under very great Discontents about the Union, therefore they were given tounderstand, if ever he came to the Throne, it was his full Intention to dissolve it, and to redress all their Grievances. A Scheme was also much talk'd of for a new

Scheme of the Jaco-

Ecclesiastical Establishment, to which, the an abjurd Writings of this Lefley, and some others were calculated, viz. to form an Union between the Churches of England and France, that in England, the Church should be independent of the Civil Power, and in France should shake off the Pope's Supremacy. But this was an absurd Scheme, tho it is probable it might give some Jealousy to the Court of Rome, as it was suited to the Maxims of abundance of the French Clergy, and most of the English Nonjurors. And therefore tho the Condemnation of Father Quesnel's Propositions, was the Foundation of the Bull Unigenitus of Clement XI. yet as this Bull came forth, when MensThoughts were imploy'd about this new Scheme, it is not improbable, but the Court of Rome had also an Eye to prevent such an Union. However this Project ferved well enough to amuse some weak Heads, and was very well relish'd by several ClergyClergymen here in England, and by many of the Epileopal Persuasion in Scotland, as ft felf in With their other Schemes.

*BUT thefe things were the cause of much Distraction in Scotland, where those, with Acced up for the establish'd Government, and the Provestung Succession, were born down by the Infolence of the Pretender's Patty, who had the Countenance and Favour Of some great Men in the Court Interest. The Scor Act of Toleration had also the Effect, which the Court-Party proposed by it. For scruples whom the Oath of Abjuration came to be onth of tendered to the established Ministers, seve-abjuraral refused to take it in the express Words tion. thereof, the all of them were willing and ready to abjure the Pretender, had the Oath been drawn up in another Porm, without refetting to the Acts mentioned in the faid Odth; which, because they obliged the Successor to the Crown, to be of the Communion of the Church of England, some of them therefore, were fearful lest that Oath should bind them to give their solemn Approbation to that, which was contrary to their Profession and Sentiments: the Sovereign being by these Acts confined to a Communion, whereunro they judged they could be no otherwise engaged than in Charity. The time being therefore enlarged in favour of these Ministers of the establish'd Religion; the fame fame was also connivid at, for the Benefit of the Jacobite Nonjurors, who after that, exercis'd their Function with more Freedom than they could do, before the A& was made.

BUT this, very much weaken'd the Hands of those, who were Friends to the Protestant Succession, and the Jacobite Party made use of the present Behaviour of some of the Scots Presbyterian Ministers, to impose on the People, that the Reason which made them scruple the Oath, was nothing but their Doubtfulness, as to the Pretender's Right. And therefore to convince the World of the contrary, the established Ministers o mitted no opportunity of making the most publick Declaration of their Sentiments; but more especially by an Act, which the Commission of the General Assembly issued forth the latter end of the Summer, entitled, A seasonable Warning against the Dangers of Popery: which was given in charge to the Ministers and recommended to the Pcople, " wherein they expos'd the Artifices, " that were made use of by the Pretender's " Adherents to weaken the Protestant In-" terest in that Kingdom, and took notice, " that the neither the Episcopal Party, nor " any other in Scotland could ever fince " the Reformation, be prevailed on, to em-" brace any Liturgy or fet Form of Wor-" ship; yet that they might procure to themthemselves as many Friends as possible in England, they had, contrary to the Method of their Predecessors, and their own usual Practice, introduced the Liturgy of the Church of England into all their Meetings, tho it was observed that sew or none of them pray'd for the Queen,"

WHEN this Act of the Assembly was fent to the several Parishes, all the Ministers. (as well those, who took the Abjuration Oath, as those, who refus'd it,) willingly and without reserve declared their Loyalty to the Minister's Queen, and firm Attachment to the Prote-flew their stant Succession in the House of Hanover; Zeal for and according as was enjoyn'd them by the fin in the said Act, they in their several Places obtested Honse of all Persons in their several Stations, to make Hanover. use of all Christian means, both with fervent Prayers to God, and Persuasives to their Fellow-Subjects, that they would do every thing that might be necessary to promote the Interest of that House, as the only means left under God to preserve their Religious and Civil Rights, and every thing that could be most dear to them. But the adverse Party, as they gain'd Strength by introducing the Liturgy of the Church of England, into the Episcopal Meetings in Scotland, in regard it procured them the Favour of the High-Church Party in England, so they took a handle from the Scruples of some of the established Ministers about the Abjuration Oath, R 2 and

and the Indifcretion of others, to give the People very bad Impressions of these Ministers; so that no pains was spared to weaken and undermine them, the by no less Hazard than by joining with profess'd Nonjuron. And such was the Zeal of some great Men here, and particularly of some Bishops and other noted Clergymen, for introducing the vour toin-English Liturgy in Scotland, that even at troduce the the Request of professed Jacobites, they pro-English cured a considerable Sum of Money from Scotland.

the Queen, and collected several other Sums among their Friends, to be laid out in Common-Prayer Books; which were fent to Scotland, and were distributed among the poorer fort by the Jacobite Agents. Per-haps this might proceed from a good Dispolition in some towards Uniformity in Religion, as the whole Island was now become united in their Civil Interests; and as these had conceived a high Opinion of the Miniftry's Zeal for the Church of England, they might think no time to scalonable as now, that they had already receiv'd the Common-Prayer in the Episcopal Meetings, which had been in all times past refus'd by the Epilcopal Clergy, as well as the Presbyterians. the Scots Nonjurors, (whose Views were to bring the High-Church Party in England, who had fallen in with their Schemes of Hereditary Right, over wholly to their Sentiments,) among other things, gave out that the

the People of Scotland were wonderfully disposed to embrace the English Liturgy; which the then Archbishop of Iork, the Bishop of London, and many others, both among the Clergy and Lairy, were forward to encourage, without observing the Snare that was cast in their way, and the dangerous Consequences of such Undertakings. For as this was contrived in Violation of the Rights of the establish d Religion of Scotland, confirmed by the Union, so it was the cause of great Distraction in that Kingdom; which might have been attended with many sore Calamities, had things continued much fore ger on the fame footing.

WHILE Scotland was in this distracted Condition, Ireland was in no loss Confus sion; for the Queen had advanced Sir Constantine Phipps, one of Dr. Sacheverell's Counsel, to be Chancellor of that Kingdon! And had also ser some other Ministers over them, who were no ways acceptable to the Irish House of Commons; but the Majority, both of the Lords and Clergy, were feduc'd into the Measures of the British Court. The Affairs Now the great Awe and Terror the Prote-of Ireland stants of that Kingdom had constantly been great under by reason of the superiour Number of Confusion, Papists among them, and their unexampled Crualties, had hitherto been the means to entivate a good Understanding and Harmony between the established Church and the R 3 Dif-

Diffenters, who had conftantly flood by one another in defence of their common Interest. And it is very well known, that the Diffenters in the North of Ireland at the time of the Revolution, hazarded their Lives and Fortunes, and did such signal Services, that those of the established Church, both Clergy and Laity, had always express'd avery grateful Sense thereof. But it was now become quite otherwise, for many Persons of no mean Note in that Kingdom forgetting the imminent Dangers that threatned their Religion and Liberties during the Reign of the late King James, and the Hardships all Protestants, without distinction, were then brought under, began to insult the Dissenters, who not only suffered many Affronts from private Persons in Violation of the Laws; but were represented by the Bishop of Cork, and some other of the Bishops, as a factious turbulent People: so that the House of Lords, in a publick Address, represented them as fuch to the Queen, and for no other Reason, but because they had interested themselves with more than ordinary Warmth in fome of the Elections. This gave so good a Handle to the Papists, and some mercenary Persons, who had got into Power, that things were strangely altered in that Kingdom, tho, contrary to the general Sense of the Protestants, the far greater number of them still retaining an implacable Dislike to çvery every thing that might give the leaft Encouragement to Papists. By this means the Elections could never be so influenc'd, as to procure a House of Commons suitable to the Mind of the Court: But what the Court could not do by other means, they essay'd' by Bribery, and the Jacobite Party having but too much Countenance from the great Men, began this Year to gather Strength, and rais'd great Tumults in the City of Dublin at the Election of the Lord Mayor, where the Papists were openly impudent, and audacious, in keeping back those Persons from voting, who were the most strenuous in the true Interest of their Country, and did the same at the Election of the City Members, and were no less insulting in divers other Parts of the Kingdom. The Government was also very remiss in punishing these Rioters; on the contrary, they did all they could to have them acquitted, nor did they take fuch notice as they ought to have done of the Printers and Publishers of Seditious Libels in favour of Popery and the Pretender's Cause; but when others had them taken up and try'd, the great Men recommended them to the Queen, as sit Objects of her Clemency, either on the account of their Poverty, or on some other Pretence: whereas those, who did the least thing that was irregular, tho in favour of the Constitution and Protestant Succession, were adjudged Enemies to the Queen's Government, tuchulent and fedicious Persons, and were therefore, purnished with the utmost severity.

THE Duke of Shrewshury was this Year Lord Lieutepant. He had been very forward in promoting the Revolution, which rendered him the most acceptable Person could have been sent among them, of all who were then in savour with the Queen; and the rather that since his coming over, he expressed himself to be still of the same Mind: which encautes a them to take some of the Minishy to account; and accordingly they charged the Lord Chancellor Phipps, as being the chief Instrument of all the Mis-chiefs which spreamed the Confliction, by giving Encouragement to Papills and other Persons distinction to the Protestant Religion and Liberties of Ireland: upon which they made several Resolves against him, and addressed the Queen to have him removed from his Office of Lord High Chancellor. But the House of Lords having made a suvoir. This was backed with another from the Convocation, who also fent a Doputation to thank him for the many eminent and fignal Services; which they alledged he had done to the Church. The Irish House of Commons, in all their Addresses to the Queen, expressed a no less regard for her Perion than the Lords; but as they had an extraordinary Concern for the Protestant Religion, so they seldom omitted mentioning the Revolution and the late King William, the glorious Inftrument thereof, with that Gratitude, which became a People who by him had been rescued from the most imminent Dangers. But as the remembering those things, and the freedom they took in expreffing their present Fears, carried an Infinuation of a Resemblance between that time and the times before the Revolution, so their Addresses were no ways acceptable to the Queen, who pechapedid not think their Dangers so great as they really were ; and for that reason, she permitted all her Answers to carry in them, an Air of severe Reproof: whereas, her Answers to the Lords and Convocation, were full of Affection and Expressions: of the highest Approbation; and in that to the Lords concerning Sir Constantine Phipps, the took notice, " That as the had always " looked on the Lord Chancellor, as a faith-" ful Servant to the Crown, and a true Lover of the Constitution both in Church " and State, the was therefore very well " pleased to find by their Address, that the

THINGS being brought to this pass in

I HANGS being brought to this pass in Ireland and Scattand, in proved the Occasion of still greater Feuds and Animosities between the two opposite Parties in all the three Kingdoms; the one side justly dreading the Dangers of Popery, and the other being either biass'd with Court Promises, or hoodwink'd by their own Credulity; and having imbibed false Notions of their Duty to their Sovereign, were even ready to give up their birthright to the Arbitrary Designs of a bad Ministry, under the Mask or blind Persuafion of Loyalty. But this was the more furprizing, that they had now a different Example from some of their own Party. Bill of Commerce had indeed opened fome Peoples Eyes, tho it is but too natural for ail Men, when they have once imbibed false Sentiments, not to make that open and frank acknowledgment of their Mistakes that they ought to do, but to avoid the Imputation of weakness and want of foresight in themselves, and the mistrust People might have of their Honesty, are for palliating even the Offences and Defigns of those, who lead them into fuch Mistakes. This was no doubt the Case of many honest Gentlemen, who perhaps were unwilling to find fault with the Ministry, and whatever Opinion they might have conceived of them, could not however by the most favourable Constructions they were able to make of their Actions, but believe that some of them were contrary to the true Interest of their Counry. However, as there are but few Perons able to see very far into the remote and listant Consequences of things, especially. :hose that require so much Application and Labour as the Affairs of Peace and War, and of Commerce, so it was easy enough. to be imagined, that many would make large Allowances for the infufficiency of the late Treaties and the Persons who made them, as being not ill defigned by them: Others again were ignorantly wavering and uncertain, and continued in a fort of suspence by reason of the Efforts the leading Men on both sides made in favour of their own Opinions of things, without giving themselves the Trouble of entering into the true merits of cither. And some of the Clergy were so invincibly attached to the Ministry from several publick Acts, which they had obtained, and others which they expected in favour of their Sentiments, that they receiv'd all things implicitly, that came from the Corut.

As things stood thus, it was not difficult for the Ministry to go on with their Designs, whereunto the Clergy did not a little to contribute; tho it is to be hoped some did it ignorantly, otherwise they would have hardly concurr'd so readily in promoting Measures, which had they taken effect must have endangered that very Constitution; which they all seem'd more than ordinarily sol-soldicitants and preserve. The Classy indeed have laim sander Discontenss by reason; of the freathress of many Esslessical Livings in Englands. Which being insufficient to main. tain Performs of a liberal Education, exposed these the more to she flattering. However, there was to much Magick in Court Brownsky, that the Generality of the Clergy hewed shemfelves very active in the Elections to promote these Revious who were new up by the Ministry, the afterwands fome inf. them become feafible of their kemer, for the Ministry were as this timpregoingivery great Lengths 3- particularly the Lord Raling breeke and his Friends, who procured bicenses of the Queen, to bring over fomeiswho had been jouwlawd g guen fince: the Althication of the late King James, and connived at the Abuses, which were committed in the Elections by Nonjurors and other dilaffeeted Persons, Besides this, severalnBooks were also published to dispose the Nation to embrace the Interest of the Pretender, in which the Revolution Was was openly condemn'd. Likewife some Pathphlets came doubt to prove the Pretender's Legitimacy, without the heaft notice eaken of them by the Ministry; and a Book in Folio concerning the Haredistry Right to the Crown, wrote by one Noninring Clergyman, and fathered by another, was presented to the Queen, and will reectved by her; tho it was to plain against the Revolution-Settlemont, that it made a very great Noise, and the Ministry could not prevent the Law raking place against Braford the Supposed Author, who was fined and intprisoned, and femenced to frand on the Pillory. But being a Clengyman, great Interest was arrade with the Quoen to have the ignominious part of the Seasonce remitted, which they produced. Belides, the Ministry took all possible Methods to get such Persons chofen to fit in Parliament, as would acquicite intirely with their Measures. And because the late Parliament did not give the Mini-Rey full Satisfaction in the Affair of Commerce, they made it their buliness even to work out several Members, who had accorded with them in every thing elfe, and to let the Electors know, that no choice would be acceptable to the Queen, but of such Perforts as would approve of the Treaties of Peace and Commerce: whereby they procured a House of Commons intirely to their Mind.

Spain.

BUT as this Parliament was to determine several Matters of the greatest Consequence to the Ministry, their Meeting was therefore put off from time to time, that all who were in the Court Interest might be fully instructed how they should demean themselves, so as to render their Services acceptable to the Queen; under whose Patronage all their Designs were carry'd on. For our great Men were not a little apprehensive, that in regard the Treaty of Commerce with France had been rejected, so the Treaties with Spain, which were now finished, would also be called for by some Members, and would probably be as much if not more dislik'd than the Treaties with France. Now it was agreed that the Trade with Spain should be put on the same foot as in the Reign of King Charles the Second of Spain, and that all the new Duties which The State had been exacted fince the War, should be merce with annul'd: but by three new explanatory Articles added to this Treaty, a Duty of 10 per. Cent. ad Valorem, was to be laid on all Commodities to be exported or imported by the Subjects of Great Britain, instead of the old Duties in the abovementioned Reign; which Duty was not only much higher than the old Duties, but the British Merchants were also brought under such Restrictions, as would have rendered the Trade with Spain impracticable.

that the Nation might swallow these Difficulties, the Concessions of Gibraltar and the Island of Minorca to be garrison'd by English Soldiers, which were to be obtain'd by this Treaty, were greatly extol'd and magnify'd; and that it was the Ministry's Zeal for the Trade of the Nation, had made them in sift so strenuously to have those important Places delivered into the hands of the Queen of Great Britain, tho it was thought if the Queen had liv'd would have soon been given back again or betray'd. The Liberty granted to the South-Sea Company of importing Negroes into the Spanish West-Indies, upon the same footing as had been granted to France, was also very much boasted of : tho the half of the Profits of that Trade were only to be given to the Company, there being one 4th Part to go to the King of Spain, and the other 4th to the Queen, or to such Persons to whom she should assign the same: but this greatly diffatisfy'd some of the South-Sea Company, which obliged the Ministry to delay the Meeting of the Parliament, whereunto the Queen's ill State of Health also contributed, she being at this time very much afflicted with the Gout. So that they not only had time to deal with the leading Men of that Company, but to bring all their Party in the House of Commons, to entertain a favourable Opinion of the Treaties with Spain; which few of themunderunderstood, otherwise than asthey were represented to them by the Ministry, and their Agents.

ON the 15th of February, this new Par-The Mees- liament met, and made choice of Sir Thomas Hanner for their Speaker, he having not only the Votes of those who were in the Court Interest, but of the opposite Party; upon the account of his great Merit, in throwing out the Bill of Commerce with France.

ON the 2d of March the Queen came to the House of Peers, and opened this first Seffion with a Speech, wherein the acquainted them. " That she had now the Satisf-" faction to tell them that the Ratifications " of the Treaty of Peace and Commerce " with Spain were exchanged, by which " her Subjects would have greater Oppor-" tunities than ever, to extend and improve 4 their Trade; and that many Advantages " formerly enjoy'd by connivance, and proecuted by such Methods as made a Distinc-" tion between one British Merchant and " another, were settled by Treaty, and an equal Rule oftablished. That as God had " bleffed her Endeavours in obtaining an " honourable and advantageous Peace to " her own Subjects, and the greatest part of " her Allies, so she was persuaded she might " be able to compleat the Settlement of all

That the Sciet tuation of Great Britain pointed out se her true Interest; that she could only " flourish by Trade, and would be most formidable by the right Application of her aval Force." And after the Queen had recommended to the House of Commons, to provide for the Exigences of the Government; she gave a severe Reprimand to those who had opposed the Measures of the Court, which some had indeed done both in their Speeches and Writings. And as those Things gave the Queen and her Ministers great Uneasiness, she said, " She. « could wish effectual Care had been taken ce to suppress those seditious Papers and fac-"tious Rumours, by which designing Men " had been able to fink Credit, whereby the " Innocent had suffered; and that some had " arrived to that height of Malice, as to insi sinuate that the Protestant Succession in " the

but even down to latest Posterity."

THIS Speech, as it was indeed a very odd one, so it was strangely canvassed; and many could not help expressing their Astonishment, that the Ministry should thus have the Assurance to abuse the Queen in the Face of the whole World, by making her The the passive Instrument of venting their Re-Queen's proaches, against those who stood up to put a Speech can-Stop to the imminent Dangers, the Nation her subwas like to be plung'd into by their unhappy jects. Conduct. But the greater was the Abuse, that by her Authority they ventured to impose so many Falschoods on the People, at the same time they pretended the utmost Regard for the Queen's Person and the Royal Dignity. Those whom the Queen called defigning Men, who had funk the publick Credit, whereby she said the Innocent had suffered; were well known to be the Perfons who had the far greater share in that Credit, so that it was impossible they should be instrumental in doing any thing that might in the least tend to its Prejudice. And as to the Danger of the Protestant Succession. perhaps some of the Queen's Ministers might not be aware of it; which yet was somewhat strange, considering what visible Steps were taken to undermine it: for there was at this very time, several Persons under Prosecution in Ireland, for lifting Men for the Pretender's Service, sto be transported to France, and subsisted there by the French King; until the Minds of the People should be thoroughly disposed to receive him, or till some convenient Opportunity should offer of sending him with a sufficient Force into some part of Britain: and indeed nothing could contribute more to encourage the Pretender's Party, than to hear the Queeu from the Throne give fresh Confirmation to the Scandal and Lyes which had been all along cast on those, who had been the truest Friends of the Protestant Succession. The Ministry, by conniving with Nonjurors, had brought the Nation to entertain such unlimited Schemes, in favour of the Regal Dignity, that it was looked upon as infulting the Queen, for any Peer or Member of the House of Commons, to make use of their Privilege or Birthright, in things that crossed the Designs of the Court, however The Inte- arbitrary and destructive to the Nation. And

The Interef of the the Court having link'd the Interest of the Church the Church, with an arbitrary Power in the link'd with Crown, many who had unwarily imbib'd trany Pow-these Notions, thought it not their Business to enquire into any Steps taken by the Ministry, if once espoused from the Throng, lest they should be found wanting in their stitution. By these means the Ministry procured Addresses from both Houses, full of seeming Loyalty and strict Adherence to the Constitution; but were such as have been usual at all times, when the worst Defigns were on foot. The unsettled State of Europe, and the Views of the Court of France to enflave this Nation, which were very manifest at this time, might have been indeed sufficient to putall Men upon their Guard; and so much the more, that the Members of Parliament were worked upon to be of such a servile Temper: and therefore there was not wanting, as at other times of imminent Danger, many considerable Persons in both Houses, who had the Courage to oppose the Dangers that threatned their Country, and even to withstand all fuch Designs as were only the Effect of illgot Power. Among the Lords, were the Earls of Wharton, Cowper, Hallifax, and Nottingham; the Duke of Devenshire, the Lord Townsbend, and several other Dukes, Earls and Lords. Among the Bishops, Dr. Wake now Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Burnet Bishop of Sarum, Dr. Talbot the present Bishop of Durham, and the Bishop of Norwich, with the major Part of that Reverend Bench. And among the Members of the House of Commons, Mr. Walpole, Gen. Stanhope, Mr. Lechmere, Mr. Hambden, Mr. Pulteney, the hon, Mr. Compton, Sir Peter S 3

King, Sir Joseph Jekyll, and most of the Lawyers who opposed the Torrent of the Court-Measures: Among the Scots, Mr. Baillie of Jerviswad, Sir David Del-rymple, and others. These Gentlemen made unanswerable Speeches against the Proceedings, that were now fet on foot by the Ministry. And tho their good Sense was in most Things over-rul'd by a Majority of Voices, yet they not only gained their Point in Come Affairs of the greatest Consequence to the Welfare of the Nation's but procured Delays and Interruptions in those which were carried against them. And the great Weight which they bore among their Gountrymen, was not only a continual Bat upon the Mimistry, but even upon the common Enemy; who otherwise would have foon pur Als Defigns in execution, in favour of the Pretender, in regard his Party had gathered great Strength) and an open Door was left by the Ministry, who had advised the Queen to disband most of the Forces; and especially those Regiments, (tho out of their Turn,) whose Commanders were the bell-affected to the Procellant Succession.

BUT while we are mentioning the Services of thefe great Men, who flood up to fleeddily in a time of imminent Danger; we ought not to forget the Behaviour of the lower House of Convocation, who, at this time, gave an Brample to the Chergy; whom they they represented, very different from what they had done in former Sellions, tho many of them could not follow it, as appeared by their future Behaviour. It was observable, the lower House never fell in with the Bishops, till Sir William Dawes, and some other Clergymen of that Party, were alarm'd at the Dangers, which were now too visible to be hid; and as they took abundance of pains to press home upon them what was their own Apprehensions of things, so it made them forget their late Differences, and An unexjoin with the Bilhops in an Address, where-petted Adin they congratulated the Queen upon her the Glergy.

recovery from her late Sicknels, and shewed their concern for the Dangers that threatned the Protestant Succession, without those extraordinary Encomiums on the Ministry and her, Majesty's Administration, which been by the Artifices of some restless Spirits foilted into their other Addresses. This happening to be presented upon the back of those abovementioned Addresses from the two Honses of Parliament, which expressed an intire Confidence in the Queen and her Ministry, it gave no small Surprize to many, and indeed it came upon the Court like a Thunderbolt, and the Concern the Miniftry were in upon this unforeseen Event, was very manifelt from the Queen's Answer, The who thanked them for the concern they Queen's had expressed for her Health; but said, as Answer.

they were in a peculiar manner Servants " of the God of Peace, the depended upon " their exerting themselves in their respec-"tive Stations to promote Peace, and the true Interest of our most Holy Religion." It was observable, that as often as the Succession was mentioned in any publick Address, it was always interpreted by the Court, as a factious Design, and a Distrust of the Queen: and the Ministry, in their private Cabals, as well as by their Agents abroad, did not spare representing the Clergy as factious Persons at this time, notwithstanding the outward regard they had hitherto shewed for their Interest. Bur the the Clergy could not pre-vent what was done by some of their Brethren, who still went on in their high Career; yet the better fort among them did not, after this, shew any great Zeal for the Ministry, for they could not be ignorant how much they abused the Queen, and endangerd the Church, while they were pretending to advance her Interest.

BUT the Court-Party became very much incensed at the Opposition they met with on all hands, and began to be more impersons in their Resentment, as is usual with Men who meet with Disappointments in the carrying on ill Designs; being resolved by all possible means to imprint infamous Characters on the most considerable Persons, who withstood them. But the their main drift drift was at General Stanbope and some other great Men; yet none happened to fall a Victim to their Rage, except Mr. Steele, who was elected a Member of Patliament this Year for the Borough of Stockbridge, and having published several Papers, particularly one named the Crisis, wherein he exposed the Dangers the Nation was brought under from the ill State of Affairs abroad, and the ill Conduct of the Ministry at home; and having from the Certainty of the Facts contained in these Papers set his Name to the Crisis and some other Pamphlets; he was thereupon called to an Account by the Houle of Commons, who voted his Crisis and his other Papers scandalous Libels: and tho the most considerable Members of the opposite Party stood up for him, and afferted all or most of the Facts mentioned in his Papers, to be true; yet he was expelled the House by a great Majority.

HOWEVER, the Court-Party began after this to lose some ground in both Houses, not the Court-only from the rapidity of the publick Mea-Party lose sure only from the rapidity of the publick Mea-Party lose sures, which every day created fresh Jealou-sies against the Lord Bolingbroke and some others of the Ministry; but also from the Behaviour of the French King, who had with much ado been prevailed on to make some slow. Advances towards the Demolition of the Fortifications of Dunkirk; which were left in such a manner, as they might mightosoon be repaired again. And that he might hower he without some Place, whereby to infelt this Kingdon, he caused a new Capalito be made at Mandyke, but a little way from Dunkirk by which being once forsitr'd, would have equally answered all the perpofes of the other, is annoy the Commarca of Great Britain and Holland, This Johns a manifest Evalion of the late Treaty of Morecht, to it put many of the Coun-Barmico silence. Affairs of Great Britain, from the Influence the Queen and her Ministers had among foreign Nations; which was indeed so small at this time, that the Emperor and other Princes of the Empire neglected the Offers the Queen made of her Mediation; nor were her Instances of any effect, either with the Court of France, or the Duke of Larrain, to have the Pretender removed out of that Prince's Dominions.

THESE Circumstances of Affairs, as they carried no favourable Aspect towards this Kingdom, so many hereupon left the Court Interest and sided with the opposite Party in their endeavours for securing the Protestant Succession; which proved a great Mortification to the Lord Belingbroke and some others of the Ministry, as on the other hand it gave no small Encouragement to those, who stood up for the true Interest: of their Country. For the Lords having about this time taken the State of the Nation under their Confiderations, the Earls of . Whare ton, Nottinghom, and Sunderland; the Lord Halifux; and some other Peers, ropresented the dangerous Citumulances to which this Nation was expected by the late Péaces and char they might berenalised to fall upon fuch Expedients as were proper to removo the just Fears the Nation was under; they moved to address the Queen, that the proper Officers might be directed to: lay before

> ... ABOUT the same time, a Letter was handed about, and afterwards printed; which was faid to have come from the Duke of Lorrain to the Queen, very much in favour of the Pretender, expressing a great deal of Tenderness and Concern for his Sufferings, and that he could not comply with her Majefty's Démands, as being inconsistent with his Honour and the Laws of Hospitality. This Letter made a great deal of noise, for as it was not directly own'd by the Duke of Lorram, so neither was it denyed by him; only our Ministers finding that many of their own Friends did not relish it, gave it out to be a Forgery, tho it was observed they made no Enquiry into the Publication of it; so that most were of Opinion, it had been publish'd to make trial how the Nation would really stand affected to that Person's Interest. But this being represented in the House of Commons, as a very great Prefumption, and what might be of dangerous Consequence, especially, since it was obferv'd, that the Nonjurors and other difaf-, fected Persons became confident and affirming upon it: therefore they moved, that the Papers concerning the Removal of the Pretender from Lorrain, might be laid before the House, and particularly, that a Letter from Dr. Robinson, the Queen's late Plenipotentiary at Utrecht, (who was now translated from the See of Bristol to London upon the Death of Dr. Compton,) to the Baron de Begue, the Duke of Lorrain's Resident in Holland, might be laid before the House. These things happen'd on the 17th of March, the little satisfaction was given by the Court to the Demands of either House, until the last of that Month, when the Lords with white Staves, acquainted the House of Peers, that the Queen had ordered some of the Papers they had addressed for, to be laid before them; but that there were others, that would require some time before they could be transcribed. The Papers that were in readiness, being those relating relating to the Catalans, the Lord Whatton ask'd some of the Ministry, what Steps had been taken for removing the Pretender from Lorrain. And there being some Difficulties mentioned on the Duke of Lorrain's pert; that Lord made answer to this effect, "That it was a very strange Change in her " Majesty's Affairs, after having reduced the " most powerful Monarch of the Age, who " threatned the Liberties of all Europe, " even so as to make him ready to submit " to any Terms she should think fit to grant * him; and had got the Scales of Europe in " her own hands, so as to be in a Condition " to limit the Pretensions of most other Prin-" ces and States of Europe: And yet that " her Power was funk so low within these " three Years, even without the Loss of one " Battle or Siege, that she was not in a Condition to prevail with so petty a Prince as " the Duke of Lorrain, to remove from his " Dominions, a Person who pretended a " Right to her Crown."

AFTER this, the Lords proceeded to Their Pro- the Affair of the Catalans, and the same deedings in Peer who spoke last, with some other Lords, of the Ca- urg'd, That as Great Britain had drawn in that unhappy People to declare for the House of Austria, and promised to support them; it was reasonable the Queen should at least procure of the King of Spain, to have their Liberties and Privileges restored to them.

This was judged to reasonable by the Ma pority of that House; that they voted an Address. "That the Queen would continue se her Interpolition in their behalf." Bue? the Answer to this Address was somewhat extraordinary; for the Queen feeth'd to lay? the blame of their Misfortunes on the Emperor, who he faid was more nearly concern. ed: notwithstanding it was well known; that it was only in the King of Spain's power to give them any Relief, they being now that Prince's Subjects, and that the Emperor had not yet finished his Treaties with the Crown of Spain. 'Indeed' the Queen made some Instances with King Philip, which she could not well avoid, on behalf of the Catalans, but in a very cold manner; besides that the Spaniards; who were in the Interest of King Philip, represented the Catalans as his Enemies, and they knew too well what a Ditemma the Court of Great Britain was brought into, to regard any thing that came from that Quarter, further than might be confiftent with their own Schemes: so that the Catalans were entirely left to Philip's Mercy. However the Ministry made their Friends believe, that the Queen had acquitted her self sufficiently by her Instances with the King of Spain, and that the Blame lay only on the Emperor; and were not wanting to improve this Opportunity against those who flood ftood up for the Catalans, as a Set of Men who studied all possible means to make the Queen uneasy. This with the great Indifference many had about the Affair of the Catalans, as appearing somewhat foreign for the Nation to engage in, gave such a Turn to many who had begun to take part against the Court, that they even fell back in Matters of the nearest Importance.

THE Lords having on the 5th of April, proceeded to take the State of the Nation under their Consideration, there happened to be several smart Speeches made in relation to the Peace; which the Court-Party could not very well answer, not only as the Protestant Interest in Germany required the Concurrence of the Emperor, who was difgusted; but also as the Peace between the States-General and the Crown of Spain, was not as yet brought to a Conclusion.

the Prote-Stant Succe/fiers.

Prof En- This was followed with other Enquiries, quiries conparticularly concerning the Danger of the Danger of Protestant Succession; and the Court-Party being very forward to have this Debate set aside, moved to have the Question put, whether the Succession was in Danger under the Queen's Administration; which occasion'd a warm Debate, which lasted from two in the Afternoon till nine at Night. The Lords who opposed the Court, struggling very hard to have the Words under her Majesty's Administration, lest out of the Question, in Duty

Duty to the Queen, who they faid was no ways concerned in it; and that if any thing wasdone amis, her Ministers alone were accountable for it. But the Majority being inclinable to justify the Ministry, or to have them skreen'd under her Majesty's Authority. infifted that the words should stand, and that the Question should be agreeable to the Queen's Expression in her Speech from the Throne; which was carried by twelve Voices, and would have no doubt been carried by a much greater Majority, had not Sir William Dawes, who succeeded Dr. Sharp in the Archbishoprick of Tork, voted in this important Affair, against the Court; by whose Weight all the Bishops of the Court-Party, except three, voted on the same side; as did also several other Lords by the Example of the Earl of Anglesea, who, tho he had for the most part been attached to the Court in all other Things, yet in this Affair he both spoke and voted against them; and his Example was of the more force, that he had been bred up to the Law in his younger Years, and was reckoned a Man of Parts, and well versed in the Knowledge of the English Constitution.

BUT the Court-Party having, notwithflanding all this, carried their Point, the Lord Hallifax moved that an Address should be presented to the Queen, "That she would "renew her Instances for the speedy Remo" val of the Pretender out of Lorrain, and " that she would be pleased, in conjunction with the States-General, to enter into a "new Guaranty for the Protestant Succession in the House of Hanover." And it being absolutely necessary to have the Succession in that Family guaranty'd by others as well as by the States-General, this Lord also moved, "That the Queen should be in-" treated to call in such other Princes into it, as she should think proper." And the Earl of Wharton moved, the Queen might also be intreated in the same Address, to issue forth a Proclamation, promising a Reward An Ad- to any Person who should apprehend the dress for a Pretender dead or alive. This Motion was Proclama back'd by the Duke of Buckinghamshire, who the Preten-moved that the said Reward might be suitader.

ble to the Importance of that Service; whose Example had a very great Influence on many who were of the Court-Party, because the Duke was not only a Man of good Parts, but of an advanced Age and long Experience, and had been for the most part in the Interest of the Ministry, having himself been President of the Privy-Council, so that what he said upon this occasion was much regarded. And therefore this Address was carried without much difficulty. But the Lord Nerth and Grey, and the Lord Treasurer Oxford, insisting that the Expressions dead or alive, might be looked upon as encouraging Assalination mation and Murder, it was therefore without any great Opposition changed thus;

That the Queen should issue out her Royal

Proclamation, promising a Reward to any Person who should apprehend and his bring the Pretender to Justice, in case he should land or attempt to land in Great

Hould land or Ireland, and that the Reward

hould be suitable to the Importance of the Service."

BUT the this Address was not greatly coposed by the Court-Party, yet some who had a more than ordinary Confidence in the Ministry, and perhaps might be blinded with Court-Favours, thought it a great deal more than was needful, and would be apt to dishearten their Jacobite Allies. But in regard, Baron Schutz, Envoy Extraordinary from the Court of Hanover, was present, these only called out to adjourn, it being then very late. And when they were over-ruled in this, they moved that all the Strangers might be fent out of the House: but they lost their Aim in this also, for the said Baron, by reason of the great Interest his Master had in these Debates, was permitted to stand behind the Throne, with the Peers Sons. But tho the Ministry and their Friends had their Mouths in some meafare shut up, by the Baron's presence, yet they plainly declared their Sentiments by an egregious Abuse of the Queen, in making her oppole the general Sense of her Peers, who in this this Request did not exceed the Bounds of their Duty, for the Queen in her Answer to this The Queen Address, said, "It would be a real strength-express." ning of the Succession in the House of her disting. her diffike ... Hanover, as well as a Support to her Go-

THIS Answer being reported to the House of Peers on the 13th, many of them were diffatisfy'd with it; and therefore it was proposed to present another Address to the Queen, with the Reasons that had moved them to sue for the above-mentioned Proclamation. But that was opposed, and an Address of Thanks was voted; wherein, "They promised to concur with the Queen " in all proper Measures for supporting her "Government, and for strengthning the " Protestant Succession in the House of Ha-" nover, as the only effectual means to put " an end to those Fears and Jealousies, which " had been so universally and industriously " spread throughout the Kingdom." This Address was carried by a Majority of two Voices only, for the Court-Party were now become very watchful, to observe the Number and Disposition of the Members, in order, if possible, to have every thing contradicted that came from the opposite Party; that, the Populace, who have no other way of, knowing things, but by such publick Decisions, might be kept in the same Sentiments. Some of the Ministry were so much offended at every Step that was taken in fa-Baron vour of the House of Hanovers that they Minister of even prevailed on the Queen to forbid Bat Hannover ron Schutz from coming any more to Court, forbid the for no other reason, but because that Minister had, by the Advice of several great Men here, and by Instructions from Hanover. demanded a Writ for the Electoral Prince. as Duke of Cambridge; to sit in the House of Peers. They eafily brought the Queen to this Resentment, by telling her, it was all one as setting her Cossin before her Eyes, and that in case that Prince came over, he would draw such a Train after thing, as might bring her Majesty under Neglect. Bur the Envoy taking his leave of the Ministers, in order to return immediately to Hanover; Mr. Bromley, the late Speaker, who was made Secretary of State in the room of the Lord Dartmouth, went to Mr. Kreyenberg, the Resident, and told him, that he or any other Minister would be acceptable to the Queen; and lest a Matter of so great importance might alarm People, both at the T 3 Court

Court of Hanover and at home, a Messenger was immediately dispatched to that Court with Instructions to the British Envoy to excuse the Proceedings of the Ministry in this Affair; and a Writ was also ordered to be made out for the Prince.

BUT whatever the Ministry might defign by this extraordinary Treatment of the Envoy, it had the Effect to heighten the Jealouly of those, who were the most firmly attach'd to the present Royal Family; who could not but look on this, as a very great Affront and Indignity offered to it: and therefore they became more strenuous than ever in opposing the Designs of the Ministry, tho it was difficult for them to carry their Point, by reason of the Instability of several Members of both Houses, who were sometimes moved one way and sometimes another. An Address was now proposed in the House of Lords, whereto the Commons should also be defined to give their Concurrence. The purport of this Address was, " To ac-

the Principles laid down in her Majesty's Speech." The Court was in hopes by this Address not only to make the World believe that this was the Sense of the whole Nation, and that they approved of all the Queen had done in her publick Negociations, but also that it would be the means to put a stop to all future Inquiries into their Transactions: but it met with very great Opposition in both Houses, there being many, who deny'd flatly, that the Peace was safe and honourable, and not only exposed all the bad Steps that had been taken in conducting this grand Affair, but in particular, they found great fault with the Treaty of Commerce with Spain, which as yet was not brought upon the Stage. Some also excepted against this Expression, That the carrying on the War was became impracticable; and afferted, that it was both false and dishonourable to the Nation, because there had been more Money raised the three last Years that the present Ministry were come into Power, than had been granted any three Years during the War; and if it had been otherwise, that the State of the Nation was as they had represented it; those, who were at the Helm, should have had so tender a regard for the Honour of their Country, as not to expose her weakness in so publick a manner, which could have only this effect, to render Great Britain very despicable in the the Eyes of Foreign Nations, and encourage · the French King to proceed with the mon Assurance in his Designs against this Kingdom, he having no other way so feasible to recover his Affairs. But this was nothing but the winding up of what the Ministry had all along aimed at, viz. to have all their Proceedings confirmed by a joint Address from both Houses of Parliament, especially with relation to the Peace, as being absolutely necessary to their Vindication; for as the monied Men had been backward in giving them Credit, both from a Doubtfulness of their Honesty and Sufficiency, which obliged them to raise the Supplies from such things, as fell most sensibly on the Poor; so it was casy enough to impose on the Generality of People, who are ignorant of Affairs, that if the War had continued any longer, the Narion must have been ruined and undone. Therefore this Address was designed to

of this Adres.

The Design confirm all the Delusions the People had been led into concerning the State of the Nation, and to keep them from giving Credit to the Charge, which the opposite Party brought against the Ministry in relation to the Peace, and other Circumstances of their Administration.

BUT Mr. Walpole, General Stanhope, and some other Members of the House of Commons were so active upon this extraordinary Proceeding of the Lords, that they had even the Influence to stop that Address, till they had discussed the other Matters, which were now before them, relating to the Protestant Succession; for which, a Committee had been appointed. Mr. Bromley, Secretary of State, endeavoured to prove that the Succession was not in danger under her Majesty's Administration; but Mr. Wal, pole with the greatest freedom asserted, that the Protestant Succession was in imminent Danger, not from the Queen, but from the dubious Conduct of some of the Ministry; and therefore insisted, that the Queen might not be mentioned in the Debate. After Mr. Walpole, and some others had given unanswerable Reasons to support the Question, the Court-Party being apprehensive lest it should go against them, endeavoured to drop it. But Sir Thomas Hanmer, the sir Tho-Speaker, stood up and said, the was mas Han"forry to see that Endeavours were used speech conto wave the Question and stop their cerning the "Mouths; but he was of Opinion, this Danger of the Protewas the proper and perhaps the only time same sucfor Patriots to speak. That a great deal cession. That for his part, he " had all the Honour and Respect imagina-! ble for her Majesty's Ministers; but that

" he owed still more to his Country than to " any Minister. That in this Debate, so much had been said to prove the Success-" fion to be in danger, and so little to make out the contrary, that he could not but believe the first; and thereupon, he took "notice of Sir Patrick Lawless being suf-4 fered to come over, and admitted to an " Audience of the Queen." This Sir Patrick Lawless was one of those, who fol-lewed King James the Second into France, and afterwards went into Spain, and notwithstanding he was outlaw'd, had leave about this time to return privately into England upon some secret intrigues then on foot between some of our Ministers and the Court of France, as some say, which procured him the favour of an Audience of the Queen: others give out, that his Bulinels here, was to sollicit a Jointure for the Queen Dowager, Widow of the late King James, and that the Queen ordered all the Arrears to be paid. But whatever was the Cause of his coming hither, it gave no small jealousy; in so much that the Speaker himself could not avoid taking notice of it. But not with-standing the great honesty of this Speech from a Pcison, who was well known to have as great a regard for the Queen as any Man, and that it was chiefly from the good Opi-nion some Members in the Court Interest entertained of that Gentleman's Integrity, that that the Bill of Commerce with France was rejected, and with this, will always be remembered to his Honour: yet the Majority in that House, were now become so much hardened against all Reason and good Sense, that they even grew regardless of the greatest Examples. "For they resolved, that the Protestant Succession was not in " danger under her Majesty's Administration." And lest they should be thought to fall short of the Lords in point of Duty and Submission to the Queen, (or rather to her Ministers,) they also resolved, " To return Thanks for "the Instances she had used for removing " the Pretender out of Lorrain, humbly desiring her Majesty to renew her Instan-" ces for his speedy Removal from thence."

THE Chairman having reported thele two Resolves, to the House the next Day; and the first being read twice, Mr. Walpole took the Opportunity to applaud the publick Mr. Wal-Spirit the Speaker had shewn the Day be others opfore, whose Merit he said ought to have had pose the great Weight in that House, besides what ings of the had been undeniably advanced to shew the Court. present Danger of the Protestant Succession; but that after this he despaired to see Truth and Inflice prevail, where a Majority of Votes could be procured against the clearest Regson. Mr. Lechmere and General Stanhope were no less plain in declaring their Sentiments concerning the Conduct of those Members

Members, who were so submissive as to give up the Interest of their Country, to the arbitrary Deligns of some bad Instruments about the Queen. And Mr. Stanhope in particular said, that it was universally acknowledged that it had been the French King's Intention to set the Pretender upon the Throne of this Kingdom. That it was still his Interest, and was now more than ever in his power to'do it: but notwithflanding all that could be said to put by these Resolves, they were carried without a Division. And as foon as they had an Answer to this Address, they concurred with the Lords in their Address, which was presented to the Queen on the 24th, who returned this kind Answer to it; "That the State of the publick Affairs " in Earope, as well as the Necessities of " her own Kingdoms, had obliged her to en-" ter into Negotiations of Peace, and not-" withstanding all Obstructions and Difficul-" ties, she had brought it to a happy Conclu-" sion." That she esteem'd this Address as " the united Voice of her affectionate and " loyal Subjects, and returned them the " heartiest Thanks that could be given by a "Sovereign, who defired nothing more than " to see her People safe and flourishing." This was so well calculated to answer all the Defigns of those who were got most into the Queen's Favour, that many began now to express their Concern and Pity for the

the Queen, who was even so far imposed on, as to give her hearty Approbation to those Things, which if she had liv'd but a little longer must certainly have opened her own Eyes, when it would have been too late to prevent the Evils that might have befallen her and the Nation.

THESE and the other extraordinary The Queen Proceedings of the Court, brought the and ber Mi-Queen and her Ministers under the greatest termed a-Contempt in all Parts abroad. As for the broad. Emperor, he had given Commission to Prince Eugene, the latter, End of the preceding Year, to treat with the French Plenipotentaries at Radstat, as has been observed; and this Year, the Treaty for concluding all Matters was set on foot at Baden, where the Princes and States of the Empire committed their several Interests to the Emperor. that the Queen of Britain might have no colour to send a Minister thither. Upon which, the States-General also forbore sending a Minister to that Place; but had several Conferences with the Baron Heems, the Imperial Minister at the Hague, concerning their Barrier and other Matters, with which they acquainted the Earl of Strafford; particularly, that the said Baron told them, the Emperor was desirous all things relating to the said Barrier, might be agreed to in Holland, and that a Minister might afterwards be sent from thence to Vienna, if they should think think well of it, to put an end to that Affair. But the the ill Conduct of the British Court, had brought all this Contempt upon the Queen; yet as the Emperor's Project of drawing this Treaty to Vienna, gave some Jealousy, that the Dutch had a hand in the contrivance, and the rather, because they complied so far with the Court of Vienna, as to forbear sending a Minister to Baden, so it gave no small Offence to our Ministers, who thereupon gave Orders to the Earl of Strafford to be very peremptory with the States. And upon this Conference concerning the Barrier-Treaty with the Emperor, he acquainted them, " That their High Mightiftry difwith the Dutch.

The Mini- " nesses were Guarantees of the Protestant " Succession, as well as the Queen was Gua-" rantee of their Barrier, and the said Succeffion would fland good and have its ef-

" feet as it should come in order; but the " Queen would never suffer any Laws to be " imposed on her on that account. That " the Queen was interested in the Affair

" of the Barrier, as well as the States, and

" therefore, no Step ought to be taken in

" it without her Participation. That the " drawing that Treaty to Vienna, looked 46 as if they had a mind to exclude the " Queen, and that he had Orders to declare " to them by his Instructions, that in such " a Case her Majesty would forthwith re-onounce all Engagements with them." (2)

A S this Contempt of the Queen and her Ministers among the Confederates carried no good Aspect, so while every one was thus looking carefully to their own Interest, Britain was in a strange Condition, divided at home, and without Friends abroad. At the Same time, the French were in the greatest hurry imaginable to finish the Canal at Mardyke, The Nations having imployed a vast number of Men to in a deplohave it done with all possible expedition, as diviou. if it had been designed for some extraordinary and sudden Enterprize. Besides this, they had by their good Agreement with the Court of Spain, which was now altogether guided by French Counsels, ingross'd most of the Trade to the Spanish West-Indies, that there was but little room lest for the South-Sea Company, or any other of the British Subjects to go into those Parts. The French were also so careful to improve their Fishing-Trade in North-America, that an Edict was made to free them from certain Duties for the space of ten Years; all which things created great uneasiness in the City of London and the Trading Towns of England. So that the Court Party had only one great Project to put in execution to render themselves popular, and to establish a kind of arbitrary Power, which was to be done under the Colour of Zeal for the Church of England.

Schism.

ALL this while the Hatred which the High-Church Party had to the Dissenters suffer'd no Abatement; for there were never wanting many Engines in all Parts of the Kingdom to keep that Fire continually burn-Most of the Clergy looked upon their Separation as proceeding from a Contempt of them, and such of the Laity as were even without the outward Profession of practical Religion, who are the most numerous in all Establishments, and who are remarkable for being the blindest Bigots, and oftentimes the greatest Patrons of Persecution, did not relish the Example some Dissenters gave of Sobriety, but upbraided them as Knaves and Hypocrites; and in this the Nonjurors and Papilts gave a helping hand, that they might prevent an Union and good Understanding between them and the Established Church, the hindring of which was of great importance to their Cause. And as the Enemies to the Dissenters were not only very numerous, but for the most part attached to the Court; so a Bill was prepared, to prevent the Growth A Bill to prevent the of Schism, and to provide a further Secu-Growth of rity for the Church of England; which was only the old Bill against Occasional Conformity revived under a new Title, more suited to the Genius of the present Times, which accounted all Dissenters Schismaticks, with the addition of some Hardships and Severities, which were not in those other Bills that had been been cast out in former Parliaments. By the Toleration and Test Acts; all Persons, who enjoy'd any Employment in the Government, were obliged at their fielt entrance on such Employment, to communicate with the Church of England; which few Diffenters refused: and therefore the Bills against Occasional Conformity offered in King William's Reign, and in the beginning of the Queen's, were defigned only to exclude the Dissenters from publick Offices; but by this new Bill, it was provided; That all those, who should enjoy any Office or Employment in the Government, should henceforward join in constant Communion with the established Church, and that they might have it in their power to exclude some, who were already in Offices, and hinder others for the future, nonewere to be received into Office or Employment, but such as could make it appear, they had at least for one whole Year before conformed constantly to the established Church. This Bill was also to extend to Justices of the Peace, Mayors, and other Magistrates of Corporations, who were even not to enjoy these Offices, but upon the Terms above-mentioned. Diffenters were also to be restrained from reaching School, or officiating as Tutors to instruct Pupils in any Family, without the Licence of the Archbishop or Bishop of the Diocels where they resided, and the Justices of the Reace had Rower by this Ast to give a final Determination in all. Cases relating thereuntos tho contrary to the Rights of the House of Reers. It was also to extend to Ireland appropriate start flanding the great number of Papills in that Kingdom.

THIS Bill was brought in by Sir William Windham, and supported by Secretary Bromley and many other Persons of Note in the Court Interest, and was so well received by most of the Members, that it was thrice read in one Day. For the Clergy had filled most Peoples Heads with strange Sentiments concerning Separation from the established Church, as being absolutely unlawful; and abundance of Pamphlets were also writ upon the same Subject, with a very bad Design to encrease our Divisions; whereby, many were so far abused, that they looked upon it as a good and necessary Service to their Country to bring the Diffenters under all the Restraints of this Act. The Occasional Conformity of Dissenters was also represented in the worst Colours that could be put upon it, so that the Stream run very powerfully against them. But some of our Ministers had further Views in this Act, than perhaps many of their own Friends imagined; for when Sir Peter King, Mr, Walpole, Sir Joseph Jekyll, General Stanhope, hope, and Reveral other Persons of Note, made it appear by undenlable Reasons, that the Church was in no Danger from the Diffenters, and that therefore there was no Oc-It is oppo-Casion for any Tuch Restrictions to be laid upon fed in the thems that the Diffenters had rather decreas d Commons. than encreased by the Lenity of the Laws fince the Revolution; That few of them were in publick Employments, and that any Severities towards them would be the means to weaken the Protestant Interest, and rather endanger than support the Church: When these things were clearly argued, some Members of the opposite Side offered to drop this Bill, provided the House would consent to bring in another Bill to hinder the Diffenters from voting in Elections, or being themselves chosen Members of Parliament: which was not only shewn to be a very great hardship upon the Dissenters, who had so great a share in the Publick; but that ir might be an Injury to the Protestant Succesfion, for which the Dissenters were known to be very zealous. And therefore all these Severities, as they savoured of Persecution, and were perfectly agreeable to the Sentiments of Papists and Nonjurors, so they were justly interpreted as having a direct Tendency to promote the Cause of the Pretender: The evil cipecially since by this Act the Dissenters, Tindency of who make up a considerable Part of the Protessants in this Kingdom, were to be excluded cluded even from all inferiour Offices, and by that means rendered incapable of the least publick Service, in case any Attempts should be made in favour of the Pretender: which was very much fear'd by reason of the great Preparations in his behalf in France, the inlifting Men publickly for his Service in Ireland, and privately in this Kingdom; the general Disaffection that appeared among the inferior fort, and among some of no mean Account, and the reftless Endeavours of disaffected Persons, to bring their Friends or the most worthics fort of People into all Offices in the several Towns and Counties of England. But especially, that it was evident, some of the Queens chief Ministers had raken fuch bold Steps in giving up the Interest of the Nation to France, that nothing Icis than such a Revolution, could skreen them from the just Resentment of their Countrymen.

THIS Act met with no less Opposition Lords peak in the House of Peers, where the Lords Cowper, Wharton, and many others of the Nobility, spoke against it. The Lord Cowper saids " Such a Bill would be so far from " answering the End proposed by the Title " thereof, that on the contrary it would be " the Means to introduce Ignorance, and its " usual concomitant' Superstition and Irrelie gion, because in many Country Towns " Reading, Writing, and Grammar Schools, were chiefly supported by Dissenters, not . "only for the Benefit of their own Chil-" dren, but likewise for the Children of ". poor Churchmen; so that the suppres-" fing of these Schools would in some " measure suppress the reading of the Scriptures. He said the very bringing int of " this Bill was injurious to the Queen, after " the folemn Declaration she had made, " that she would inviolably maintain the "Toleration: That the Queen had ale? " clared it to be the Glory of her Reign; " to follow the Steps of Queen Elizabeth; " but her giving the Royal Affent to this "Bill, would be quite contrary to that "Queen's Government, which had not only " entertain'd and protected the reformed "Wallasms, who took Sandmary in their "Dominions, from the Spanish Inquisition; " but had the publick Exercise of their Re-" ligion likewise allowed them, and caused " a Clause to be inserted in their favour in " the Act of Uniformity, whereby that wife " and glorious Queen greatly emereas'd the "Wealth of the Nation; the Waltoons " having introduced and settled the Woollen " Manufactures, which are the best Branch " of the national Trade. That the Pro-" tection and Encouragement the late King " William and Queen Marydian given to " the French Protestants, and which had "fince been continued to them by the  $\mathbf{U}_{3}$ Qucen,

"Queen, had proved no less advantageous " to Great Britain, by improving divers « Manufactures; and thereby increasing " the Wealth and Strength of the Nation:
" And as the Ministry had for three Years spift taken away the Pension of 15000 l. " & Year allowed by Parliament in the Civil "Lift, towards the Maintenance of their "Ministers and Poor, it would therefore be wery hard to deprive them of the means " of Subfiftance, either by keeping Schools, " or teaching in private Families." THE Lord Viscount Townsbend, who had lived sometime in Holland, took notice, "That the Wealth and Strength of that great 4 and powerful Republick, confifted in the "Number of its Inhabitants; but that he "was persuaded if the States should cause " the Schools of any one Sect tolerared in "the United Provinces to be flut up, they " would be soon as thin of People as Sweden or Spain, where the one is depopula-Mited with the Inquisition, and ithe other "with the rigid Laws, in favour of Luthe-

"THE Earl of Nottingham faid, "he had formerly been of opinion that the Occasional Conformity of Differences was dangerous to the Church, and therefore he ever promoted the Bill respectent it. "But he believed the Church of England had now that Security, which would pre-

"had now that Security, which would pre-

"ferve her from all Danger, and therefore he thought himself in Conscience ob liged to oppose so barbarous a Law, which tended to deprive the Parents of their natural Right of educating their own Children. That he had observed both from History and Emperience, that all the Persocutions that had been raised in Enguished against those term'd Schismaticks, originally proceeded from and tended to favour Popery."

THE Earl Wharton, who was very zealous in this Debate; and had but a mean Opinion of the Policies and Designs of the great Man, who promoted this Bill; said. "he was agreeably furprifed to find some " Persons of a sudden, were become so re-" ligious as to fet up for Patrons of the " Church, but that he could not but won-" der that Persons who had been educated " in Differting Academies, whom he ": could point at, and whose Tutors he could " name, should appear the most forward " in suppressing them. That this would be " but an indifferent Return for the Benefits "the Publick had received from those "Schools, which had bred these great Men, " who had made so glorious a Peace, and "Treaties that execuse themselves, who "had obtain'd so great Advantages in Com-" merce, and paid the publick Debrs of the "Nation: so that he could see no reason

THIS Great Man had been instrumental in throwing out several other pernicious Bills, by turning their deform'd and most shameful Parts to open View, even when himself and others had used the most convincing Arguments to little purpose against them; but now there was such a prevailing Infatuation in both Houses, that neither the plainest Reason, nor a Declaration of Facts supported by the sharpest With could avail any thing to prevent its passing into an Act. The Dissenters gave in their Reasons against it, which were afterwards printed. The Quakers did the like. The Datch and French Protestants laid also their Grievances before the Lords, so far as the Bill affected them, and a Representation was sent from the Scots Ministers, in behalf of their Countrymen settled in England and Ireland: but some of these Ministers being hot against the English Liturgy, their Representation was therefore very ill received by the Court-Party. However the chief Promoters of this Bill had little or nothing to say for it, more than was expressed in the Title, that it was to prevent the growth of Schilm, by hindering the Dissenters from endangering the oftablish'd Church. by their private Academies and Seminaries. which they represented as the Nurseries of Schism: Yet it was carried in the House of Commonsby a Majority of 237 Votes against 126. It was likewise carried in the House of Lords, tho the Votes in that House were' to the Number of 22, entresh their Difficult from this Act, and were achiefly the faine, who protested against the Duke of formand's Orders, and the Terms of Prace offered by 28 Peers France, whose Names have been already inand 5 Bifloor differed. Five of the Bishops also joined with and 5 Biferred. Five of the Bishops also joined with finis from these Lords, most of that Reverend Beach

this Ast. having absented themselves upon this Debate.
Their Reasons were in substance as follows.

THAT they could not apprehend (as the Bill recited,) that great Danger might enfue from the Diffenters to the Church and State. First, "Because by Law, no Diffent "ter was in any Station, that could be sup-"posed to render him dangerous," SECONDLY, "Since the several Sects "of Diffenters differ as much from each o"ther, as from the established Chirch, they could never form of themselves a National Church, nor have any Temptation to fet up any one Sect among them: for in "that case, all, that the other Sects could cxpect, was only a Foleration; and as they cnjoy'd that already, it was therefore

" enjoy d that arready, it was increpore their Interest to Support the established Church against any, who would arremot

" to destroy it. The transfer of the transfer

" fenters were dangerous, Severity could nor be so proper and effectual a Method to reduce them to the Church, as a Cha-

" ritable

" ritable Indulgence, which was manifest " from Experience, there having been more " Diffencers reconciled to the Cuurch fince " the Act of Toleration, than in all the " time fince the Act of Uniformity. FOURTHLY, " If Severity could be " supposed ever to be of Use, this could " not be a proper time, while the Nation " was threatned with much greater Dangers " to Church and State, against which the " Protestant Dissenters had join'd, and were "fill willing to do the same; wherefore " they ought not to be driven from espou-" fing the common Interest, by enforcing " the Laws against them in things that must, " above all others, most sensibly touch " them, viz. the Education of their Chil" dren. FIFTHLY, "This must be the more grie-" vous to Diffenters, because it was what they " little expected from the Members of the " established Church, after the Act of Tole-" ration, and the repeated Declarations " from the Throne in former Parliaments " against Persecution, as being the peculiar " Badge of the Roman Church; which yet "had not been retaliated, even upon Pa-" pists, the Laws against them having been " the effects and just punishment of Trea-" sons, committed against the State; but this was not so much as pretended against "the Diffenters, whose Zeal for the Pro-" testant

" testant Succession, was very; conspicu-" ous. SIXTHLY, " In all the Instances of " making Laws, or of a rigid Execution of " the Laws against Dissenters, it was very " remarkable, that the Design was to wea-" ken the Church, and to drive them into " one common Interest with the Papilts; " which was the Method suggested by Po-" pish Councils, to prepare them for the " two successive Declarations in the time " of King Charles the Second, and the " following one issued out by King James, " to ruin the Civil and Religious Rights of "the Subjects of this Kingdom. And they " could not think that the Arts and Cou-" trivances of the Papists to subvert the " Church, were proper Means to preserve " it; especially at a time; when the Nation " was in more Danger of Popery than ever, " by the Designs of the Pretender, suppor-" ted by the mighty Power of the French "King, and great Numbers in this King-" dom, who were professedly in the Pre-"tender's Interest. SEVENTHLY, " But if the Diffen-" ters should not be provoked by this Seve-" rity to join in the Destruction of their " Country; yet it was justly to be feared, " they might be drawn by this Bill from " England, to the great Prejudice of her " Manufactures; and as the Nation gain'd

them by the Perfecution abroad, so it might again lose them by the like Proceedings at home.

EIGHTHLY, "The Miseries they apprehended here, were greatly enhanced by extending this Bill to Ireland, where the Consequences might be fatal, the Number of Papists there, far exceeding the Protestants of all Denominations, and the Differences being to be treated as Enemies or Persons dangerous to that Church and State, notwithstanding they always had,

46 and still would join with the established 46 Church in their common Desence against "the common Enemy of their Religion,

" might cause great Divisions. And the Protestants being thus unnecessarily divi" ded, and the Army in that Kingdom ve" ry much reduced, scem'd to them, to be " exposed to the Danger of another Masfacre, and the Protestant Religion in danger of being extirpated. And it was al-

" so to be feared, that the Scots in Britain, whose National Church is Presbyterian,

" would not so heartily and zealously join

"with England, when they saw those of the same Nation, same Blood and Reli" gion, so hardly treated. And lastly, what

" would yet be more grievous to the Prote" stant Dissenters in Ireland, that while the Popish Priests were register'd, and had the

" free Exercise of their Religion by Law;

" the:

" the Diffenters were so far from enjoying " the like Indulgence, that the Laws Were

" by this Bill enforced against them."

BUT the thefe and the many other undeniable Reasons given against this Bill in both Houses, could by no means divert the Rapidity of the Court-Measures yet as such hot Proceedings are not aPways without their good Effects, even when they are designed for evil Purpoles, so it was not long after this, when a new Scene was opened, which in some measure turn dethe Stream: for the Pretender's Friends had taken fuch Encouragement from this Act, as being Dangers.

The Nation made in favour of their Cause, that they be gan now to be so open and barefac'd in what they did, that the Ministry could not without hazard to themselves, avoid taking notice of them. They had continued all this time lifting Men in Ireland, and not withstanding three Men had been hang'd in Dublin, viz. John Rily, Alexander Bourk, and Martin Carrol, upon that account; yet so great was their Insolence, that being in many places protected by the Papills, they fent over two Men of the Name of Kelly and some other Agents into England to inlist Men here; who being apprehended and fent to Prison, the Ministry could not prevent the Privy Council, (who indeed were not all of one stamp) from advising the Queen to iffue forth her Proclamation, according Ю to the late Address of the House of Lords, for apprehending the Pretender, the Parliament being fill fitting. This was accor- A Procladingly done within a few Days after the past-maties procur'd fing of the Schiff Act: and in this Procla-against the mation, a Reward of 5000l. was promised Pretender. by the Queen to any Person, who should bring the Pretender to Justice. The late Debates concerning the Dangers that threatned the Nation by the Schism Act, were not altogether without their Weight. For an Address was immediately procured in the. House of Commons with a Promise of a Reward of 100000l. out of the first Alds of Parliament to be added to the 5000l. the Queen had offered by her Proclamation, to the Person, who should perform so signal a Service to the Nation. Neither were the Lords behind hand with the Commons, for they also presented an Address of Thanks. at the same time, in which, " They took " Occasion to repeat their humble Request and Advice to the Queen, that as her In-" stances for removing the Pretender from " Lorrain, had hitherto been ineffectual;

" Prussia, into the Guaranty of the Protefrant Succession. And since the Papists

" and Nonjurots were grown to infolent, as tion.

" not only to support the Pretender's Claim " by their Writings and Discourses, but " also by traitorously inlisting Men into his " Service, and sending them into France; " they humbly befeeched her to iffue out " her Proclamation, with a Reward to those, who should bring to Justice any of the Persons who had either inlisted Men for 44 the Pretender, or the Persons inlitted. " or fuch as should hereaster offer to lift or " be inlisted in Great Britain or Ireland. "And they further prayed, that she would give her Orders to all Magistrates and " Officers, to have the Laws put in execu-" against Papists and other disaffected Per-" fons, by taking from them their Horses " and Arms, and confining them to their "Habitations as usual. This Address was " approved, no one offering to oppose it, " and presented to the Queen on the zsen of June, who gave it a favourable An-44 fever. THE Courtiers were fo much struck with this unforescen Event, and the Aremuous Endeavours that were now made in both Houses to secure the Nation by a The Court Vigorous Prosecution of the Laws against in a great Papists and Nonjurors, and other difaf-Confernafected Persons, that they began to slacken very much in their usual Zeal for the Minifiry; which gave others a fit Opportunity to inquire more freely into all their Miscarria-

so that the Lords, on the second of Fuly, took the Treaty of Commerce with Spain under their Consideration. And this Affair being opened by the Earl of Notting-The Treaty ham, that Lord used several Arguments to merce with prove that no Trade could be carried on by Spain beour Merchants into the Dominions of Spain fore the Lords. without a manifest Loss. To support this, he produced a Letter from an English Fac-, tor in Spain, to his Principals, and was seconded by the Lord Cowper. There was scarce any of the Court-Party could say much in defence of this Treaty; only the Lord Bolingbroke being the chief Person concerned in it, was obliged to stand up for it, tho what he had to alledge in its favour, was judg'd to be of little moment. He excepted against the abovementioned Letter, which he would fain have persuaded the House was a forged one. But both he, and those few of the Ministry, who durst venture to second him. were soon put to filence by the Testimonies of Sir William Hodges, Mr. Mead, and about Thirty other eminent Merchants concerned in the Spanish Trade; who being called into the House of Lords, all of them declared, that unless the three explanatory Declara-Articles were abolished, they could not car-tions of the ry on a Trade with Spain without losing 20 concerning or 25 per Cent. and some of these Mer-it. chants being Persons, who had in many other Things, fallen in with the Court Meafures.

fures, it added the greater Weight to the that had been objected against this Treaty to that the Lords resolved unanimously con address the Queen, W That all the Papers " relating to that Treaty, mighe be laid be-" fore them, with the Names of the Persons, " who had advised her to make that Trea-" ty." On the Monday following the Lords with white Staves reported the Queen's Anfwer: " That she being given to underfland, that the three explanatory And " of her Subjects, had confested to their being ratify'd." But the Queen making no mention of the Persons, who had adviste her to it, the coming at the knowledge of whom, was their chief Design, several Lords excepted against the Queen's Answer, as unfatisfactory: and among others, the Earl of Wharton and the Lord Halifon alledged, if so little Regard was shewn to the Addresses and Applications of the august Assembly, they had no Business in that House. And it was moved, to draw up a Representation to her Majesty, to lay before her the insuperable Difficulties, of carrying on a Trade with Spain: And likewife that the House should insist on the Queen's naming the Perfons, who had advised her to ratify the three explanatory Articles. The first was agreed to by the whole House: but the Majority, out of respect to some Persons in

In the Ministry, warded off the latter. And rhe Queen, in Answer to the Lords Representation, faid, " It had been her Care to pro-" cure all possible Advantages for her Sube jeds Trade, and that the would continue se her uemost Endeavours to obtain further es Benefits, particularly in the Trade with « Spain, which was so useful to her Suber jefts." But the Lords being now resolved to to so the bottom of this Affair, sent a Message to the House of Commons the next Day, to acquaint them, that having under their Confideration Matters of great Mo-ment relating to the Trade of the Kingdom, defired that such Members of that House, as were Commissioners of Trade. might have leave so attend them; which being agreed to, the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations were called in. And the East of Wharton pointing to Arthur Moore, faid, " He did not doubt but one of these "Genelemen could make it appear, that the " Trade to Spain was very advantageous." This Moore was thought to be the chief Manager of that Affair under the Direction of the Lord Bolingbroke, but was so ill prepared for this Braminarion, that he contradicted himfelf in several of his Answers to the Questions that were put to him by the Lord Cowper, concerning the three Explanatory Articles: and the Suspicion the Lords entertain'd of him, was very much increased by the X 2

the Declarations of the other Commission Depositions ners, particularly Mr. Monkton, who faid, Mr. Moore, that Mr. Moore only read the said Anicks curforily, without giving them time toexamine them. Besides this, Mr. Pople their Secretary being interrogated upon Out, what he knew of this Affair, deposed that Mr. Moore had shewn him a Letter from Monsieur Orry, directed to Don Arturio More, importing in substance, that he must not expect the 2000 Louis d'Or per Am. that had been promised him, unless he got the three explanatory Articles ratify d. . Mr. Whylock, first Clerk to the Commissioners, and privy Secretary to Mr. Moore, was also in Conscience obliged to declare many things, which bore hard upon the said Moore, which put the Court-Party to: Mence.

THE Lords, after this Discovery, proceeded to the Affair of the Affairo Contract, and it appeared by the Gonfession of Mr. Lownds Secretary, and Mr. Taylor such Clerk of the Treasury, that they were only nominal Assignees for the Quarter Part of the Assignees Contract, reserved to the Queen; but that some Persons to them unknown were to have the Benefit of it, and were suspected to be the Lord Bolingbroke, the Lady Massam, who was a great Favouric with the Queen, and the said Monre: Upon which the Lord Cowper made it appear, That the Uncertainty and Suspence in which the

the South-Sea Company had been a long time kept, whether the Queen would retain to herself, or give to the Company the quarter Part of the Assistato Contract, had been the principal Obstruction to the Company's carrying on their Trade. Hereupon a Motion was made to address the Queen, That she would be pleased to give the " South-Sea Company, not only the quarter part of the Assente Contract reserved " to her Majesty, but all the other Profits 4 arising from the same." But this was overruled, and another presented, "That the Queen would be graciously pleased to referve for the use of the publick, such other Advantages as had not already been siven to the use of the South-Sea Com-" pany." But the Queen made Answer, "That she would dispose of these Advan, " tages as she thought best for her Service." Which being a dissatisfactory Answer, even to many in the Court-Interest, by whose Weight the Address was put into this Form, therefore the Lords on both fides began to complain of the Queen's Silence, in relation to the Desire of the House, concerning the Persons who had advised her to ratify the three explanatory Articles; and it was not doubted by the Disposition that appear'd among the Lords at this time, but the Lord Bolingbroke and Mr. Maare would have both been sent to the Tower. But the LotLettery Bill being ready for the Royal Affent, the Lotd Belingbroke and his Friends, who kept in great Favour with the Queen, persuaded her to come the same Day to the House, who very unexpectedly put an End The Parlia to that Session of Parliament, and by that means also put a stop to any further Proceedings against those Persons, and to the Enquiries in the other Affairs then under the Consideration of that House. THIS made a great deal of Noise throughout the whole Nation, as indeed it well might. Some pretending to take part with the Queen, exclaimed against the Lords, for pressing her to things so contrary to her Inclinations; these carried their Notions very high, alledging that she was not to be accountable to her Subjects for any thing she did; and the far greater Number were disposed this way, by the mischievous Papers that came forth every Day, under the Direction of the Court. On the other hand, the Lords, who are the supreme Judicature of the Nation, and had a Right to advise the Queen in all Affairs that concern its Welfare, looked upon this open Neglect of their Representations and Addresses as an arbitrary Proceeding in those who had advised her to it, and what was contrary to her Interest and the real Happiness of her People. The most considerable Persons in the House of Com-

Commons, and the trading part of the Nation, were also very uneasy; and the blame was laid on the Lord Bolingbroke, who now managed most Affairs at Court, and was got into more than ordinary Favour with the Queen, in so much that the Ministry were divided into two Factions, the one siding with the Earl of Oxford, and the other with that Lord; who carried things to much greater Extreams than the other, and withal, had fuited his Management more to gain upon the Populace, under their present Delusions. And his Schemes being rash and dangerous, and his own Circumstances somewhat ticklish; so it was much to be fear'd he would at last stick at nothing that might save him from the Storm, that was now visibly gathering over his head. This was the Cause of several private Consultations among the greatest Private Men of the Kingdom, concerning the pre-tions afent Dangers that threatned the Nation, gainst the and the proper Methods to prevent them. Designs of While the French King had in a manner stry. got the Reins of Europe in his hands, and the Queen in great contempt among her late Allies abroad; and at home the Instability of those in the Court-Interest was fuch, that the many of them opposed the Ministry in the Bill of Commerce, and some other Matters which might affect their their Elections, yet in things where the Danger was not so apparent and visible, they were still the same Men, and would chime this or that way, as might best suit their present Turn; so that there was no depending on them, and the Principles of the Peovie were in all Parts of the Kingdom so much debauch'd by the restless Endeavours of wicked Engines; that it was judged high time to provide for the Nation's Securitv. And therefore our Great Men, who stood up for the Protestant Succession, were the most frequent at the above-mentioned Consultations; and the better to secure the faid Succession, they held some private Conferences with the Ministers of the States-General, and some Overtures were also made to the Court of Vienna, and other foreign Courts; that a Foundation of an Alliance might be laid, in case any Attempt should be made in favour of the Pretender, either in the Queen's Lifetime, which many were apprehensive of. or at her Death. All other necessary Preparations were also making, that the Nation might not be furprized unawares, and many were chearfully disposed to spend their Lives and Fortunes in a Gause which was of the last Moment to this Nation in particular. and to the Protestant Interest in all Parts abroad.

BUT while these things were in agisation, the Heats at Court grew into a perfect Flame: which it seems brought the Queen into so much Perplexity of Mind, that within a short time after the Prorogation of the Parliament, viz. On Friday the 30th of July, the then being at Kenfington, fell suddenly into a Fir, which took away her Senses; but having recovered a little from this Disorder, she seem'd inclinable to make some Changes in her Ministry, and the Earl of Oxford, after some Expostulation with the other Ministers, resign'd his Office of Lord High Treasurer, foreseeing their dangerous Measures would, if they should miscarry, bring Ruin and Destruction on their own heads. But it would, have been much more to his Honour, had he refign'd fooner, and not concurr'd to strengthen them in those other pernicious Measures, that naturally led them in the Issue to conspire in the highest degree against the Welfare and Happine's of their Country. The Queen at the same time appointed the Duke of Shrewsbury to be Lord High Treasurer, in the room of the Earl of Oxford; which yery much inflam'd the Lord Bolingbroke's Party, who wanted above all things to have the Management of the Treasury in their own hands: and this was such a Disappointment to them, that they could not keep within the Rules of Decency, even in the Queen's ing Sunday the first of August, the Queen about eight in the Morning relaps'd into snother Fir, whereof fhe died; which falling one so suddenly, and while the Court was in these

Diffractions, so it broke all their Measures. FOR the same Day about Noon, GEORGE

Elector of Brunswick Hanover, was (as K. George sext Heir to the Princels Saphia his Mopredained ther, who died about two Months before the Quoen,) proclaim'd King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, with all the usual Solemnity; and having sometime before, as apparent Heir to the Crown, appointed a Regency to govern in his Absence, in case of the Queen's Death, these immediately took place, and managed all things with the greatest Calmness, having dismiss d those Persons from the Government, who were the most obnoxious. Upon which, the Lord Bolingbroke withdrew himself privately into France, as did also the Duke of Ormond some time after, and were attainted in Parhament of High-Treason. These were followed by others of their Party. But about for Weeks after the Death of the Oncen. King George arrived fafe in his Dominions, accompanied with the Prince of Wales his eldest Son, (now our Sovereign ) who were not only received with the joyful Acclamations of the People, but the very Elements themselves form'd to favour those two welcome Guests, the Weather having been more settled and for a longer time than had been known, at that Season of the Year. The publick Credit also recovered, The public for much that this Year's Lottery, which lick Credit was not like to fill, and the drawing of it recovered, therefore put off, was all subscribed for in one Day.

BUT norwithstanding this outward Calm, and Serenity, which appeared upon his Majesty's first coming into the Kingdom, it was not long when a threatning Storm began to arise, from the restless Endeavours of disaffected Persons; who having had so much Countenance from those who were lately in Power, and having their Expectations hoisted very high by the Tendency of the late Measures, to promote the Pretender's Interest, could not bear the Disappointment. But as foon as they recovered from the Surprize they were brought into by the Queen's firdden and unexpected Death, began to give out very broad Threatnings. And indeed things had but an indifferent Aspect both at home and abroad; our late Allies being weakened and divided in their Interests, and having in a manner loft all the Advantages they had gain'd by a twenty Years successful War, and the most valuable Interests of this Nation being made a Sacrifice to France. while a Foundation was every way laid torecover the Affairs of that Kingdom. PrePretender was still in Lorrain, ready upon a Call: for what Inflances the Queen made for his Removal from thence were difregarded at the Court of France, as proceeding only from the Importunities of those who were zealous for the House of Hanover; who were then brought under all manner of Discouragements and Incapacities ; and while our Armies were disbanded and our Fleets laid up, the French wese making all manner of Preparations both by Sea and Land. These things so much animated the Presender's Friends, that they begun to fir up Turnules and Riots in divers parts of the Kingdom; which was so much infected with the prevailing Principles of the late Times, that the French King, who knew very well the defenceless Condition we were in, and what Spirit reign'd in the Nation, thought no time could be more seasonable to send the Pretender among us, and thereby to effect our Ruin. As this gave birth to the late Rebellion, so the Nation might soon have been involv'd in Blood, and all Europe in a new War, had not Providence seasonably interposed by the Death of the late French King, which great Event quite overthrew their Measures; for the Affairs of France took such a turn, as divested the Rebels of all hopes from abroad, and many of their Friends at bome began to look shy on them, while others had their Eyes sufficiently opened to fee their own Folly. We have but just mentioned these Things, as being the natural and genuine Fruits of the dangerous Measures carried on in the latter part of the Queen's Reign, which we judged necessary, to bring our Narrative to a proper Period. This Rebellion, which appeared so formidable in the Beginning, was soon suppress'd; after which his late Majesty, by renewing our Atlances abroad in several honourable and advantageous Treaties, and by his good Government at home, recovered the Affairs of this Kingdom to a better Prospect than has been known in any sormer Age.
